You can answer this little Asian's prayer

This tiny Korean darling is the victim of a ravaged society. Abandoned by parents with no one to care, somehow she was brought to one of COMPASSION'S Homes where Christian love and care abound for more than 22,000 children at present. Could you have turned her away?

Like hundreds of others who come to our 170 Homes, however she sorely needs a sponsor. And each day she with hundreds of others prays that God will send her a "Mommy" or "Daddy" like other children have. You can answer that prayer today.

For only $10.00 a month you can have the joy of sharing a little girl's or boy's life—writing letters, exchanging photos, etc. Can you think of a better way to invest a few pennies a day? We sincerely invite your response in the coupon below.

A Wonderful Collector's Item!

1966 A. Michelsen Christmas Spoon

Since 1910, the year of the first Christmas Spoon by A. Michelsen, these spoons have been a favorite Christmas gift! The 1966 spoon, designed by D. Dahlerup, is called FLIGHT TO EGYPT. Always of sterling silver, this year's spoon is completely gold-plated with the lovely motif in rich blue and black enamels. $16.50 postpaid. Matching dessert fork, also $16.50.

We can still supply all the old spoons (and forks), even the ones (1910-1919) that have been discontinued by the company. A. Michelsen will soon announce the discontinuance of the next ten spoons and forks (1920-1929) and so on until eventually only the current year spoon and fork will be made.

Send 25¢ (stamps or coins) for descriptive brochure with full-color photos, prices, 1910-1966 spoons.

Are draperies that look good good enough?

Roc-lonized draperies keep the outside weather outside of deep bay window. Room settings designed by Ed. Motyka, A.I.D.

No! Of course draperies have to decorate. Up to now, though, beauty has only been skin deep. Happily, the most luxurious new draperies back their beauty with long-lasting plus-performance. The kind of performance that keeps fresh young colors looking lively, keeps your beautiful draperies and fabrics from looking old before their time.

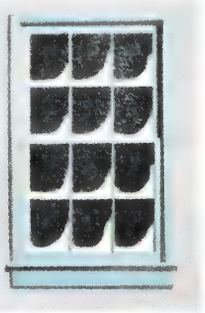
Sun screen filters rays that fade colors, rot fine fabrics.

The secret is new Roc-lonized—the exclusive process that endows beautiful draperies with so many advantages, including Complete Climate Control.

Roc-lonized draperies insulate permanently against the heat of summer and the cold drafts of winter. They form a barrier against the outside weather where you need it most: at the window. You enjoy year-round comfort—and cut down the high cost of heating and air-conditioning your home, while you beautify your rooms.

Only Roc-lonized draperies have the ingenious new "Rain-No-Stain" shield. Protects against every kind of dampness damage—from the common condensation that collects on glass to an unexpected rainstorm.

Roc-lonized draperies guard against sun fading problems as well. They screen out the harmful sun rays, to prevent ugly fading and streaking of fresh young upholstery and carpet colors inside of your beautiful room.



Best of all, Roc-lonized draperies look every bit as smart as they act. They always hang in rich, deep, luxurious folds. The process adds magnificent hand and body to fabrics, prevents ugly sagging, stretching, shrinking. Nothing but beauty, performance—and privacy, to keep outside eyes outside, just like outside weather.

Cloudburst? No worries with "Rain-No-Stain" shield.

Roc-lonized draperies are completely care-free, too. Wash or dry-clean like a dream. Little or no ironing. Just hang them up. Wrinkles hang out, full-bodied folds fall right into place.

There are four ways you can enjoy all these Roc-lonized advantages. You can insist on Roc-lonized self-lined ready-made draperies. You can buy ready-made draperies with separate Roc-lonized lining. You can order your custom draperies with Roc-lonized linings. Or you can buy the new Roc-lonized decorative fabrics for easy home sewing.

Roc-lonized insulates against cold—and heat.

No matter which choice is yours, your Roc-lonized draperies have the Good Housekeeping Guaranty Seal.

At 4½ she's reading 3rd grade books

a child prodigy? not at all! your child, too can be reading one, two or three years beyond his present age level...even if he's a "poor" reader now

Prove it to yourself... with this 7 day free trial!

Reading is fun for Sarah—as it should be for every child. At age four and a half, she's already choosing her own books at the San Diego, Cal. library.

She reads books many third graders find "hard going." Yet she won't enter first grade for another year.

Sarah is typical of thousands of children who learned to read with "Listen and Learn with Phonics" — a reading kit that actually makes reading fun.

"Listen and Learn with Phonics" was developed by a reading expert. It has been endorsed, after extensive testing by teachers, schools, and educators.

This practical (and inexpensive) home-learning kit fascinates eager young minds from three to ten. The child hears the letters or sounds on the phonograph record, sees them in his book and repeats them himself. This makes an absorbing game of better reading—with amazing results!

FOR EXAMPLE:

- Slow or average readers show sudden, often spectacular improvement in reading, in spelling, in understanding.
- Older children often advance their reading skills several years beyond their age levels.

  Young "pre-schoolers" actually teach themselves to read by this simple but startlingly effective phonics method of words, pictures, and records.

What good is a dishwasher detergent if it's no good in your water?

Every dishwasher detergent manufacturer knows that no one dishwasher detergent works equally well in all kinds of water. Yet nobody does anything about it — except the makers of FINISH. They have developed special formulas of FINISH for different types of water. Before they send your Special Formula FINISH into your area they test it in various types of water prevalent in your area. They make sure that your Special Formula FINISH washes dishes cleaner and shines glasses brighter than any other detergent.

It stands to reason that the world's largest producers of dishwasher detergents wouldn't go so far out of their way to give you a better product if it weren't important. Nor would the manufacturers of all 28 makes of dishwashers approve it. Do you consider it important enough to try your Special Formula FINISH in your dishwasher?

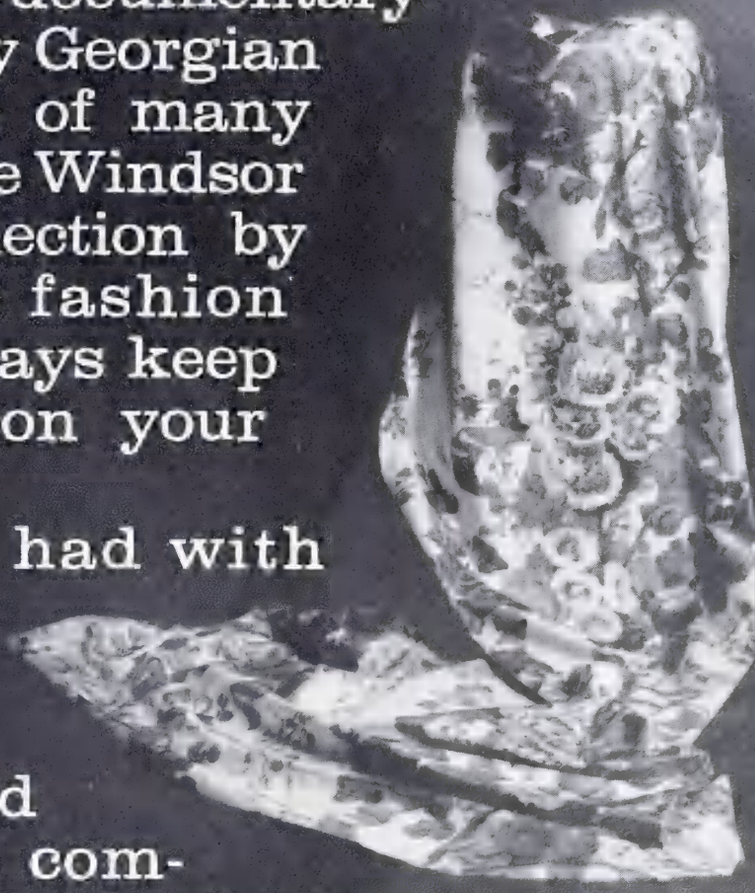
THE ABC'S OF FOUNDATION PLANTING

By ARMAND BENEDEK
Landscape Architect

To soften the hard line where a house meets the ground, and as a transition from the man-made structure to the surrounding natural scene, there's the need for foundation planting. But more often than not, this admirable purpose is defeated by the use of too many kinds of plants: plants too close to the house; overgrown trees and shrubs that darken the windows; and groupings with little relationship to the design of the house. Following are four precepts of good design in planting.



Plant trees and shrubs that will stay the size you want

There's always the temptation to plant fast-growing trees and shrubs for quick effect at the base of a new house. But a mock-orange (Philadelphus grandiflorus), for example, which will reach four feet in two or three years, is not going to stop there: it will grow on to 10 or 12 feet. To keep it the height you want, it must be pruned. This takes time, and destroys the character of the plant. If you want a 3- or 4-foot plant, it's best to get something like the leucothoe, or Savin juniper, which will grow to the size you want and stay there—even though it takes longer. Perhaps you can buy one plant near full-size for immediate effect and plant it with smaller ones to show what they'll be.

(Please turn to page 188)

So very, very English.

And so favored in interior decoration these days. This authentic documentary print of 18th Century Georgian vintage is just one of many from the new Royale Windsor Garden Import Selection by Bloomcraft . . . top fashion innovators who always keep a considerate eye on your budget, too.

The print can be had with coordinated fabrics such as rich silks and velvets, as well as plaids and solid colors, so you can compose just the ensemble that you've been dreaming of. So have a smashing good time at your favorite drapery counter with Royale Windsor Garden fabrics . . . they'll make you happy for a long, long time.

Simplify the plantings in texture, size, and form

One grouping of five or seven fine shrubs of the same kind (odd numbers are easier to arrange) is much better than four or five different kinds of plants together. Too much variety in a small area becomes confusing to the eye, and for foundation planting in particular, the more restful the effect, the better. The care is easier, too, with fewer species.

Relate the planting to the shape of the house

One purpose of foundation planting is to enhance the façade of the house—and not camouflage it as is so often the case. Let the house control the size and shape of the plants: Use a tree, such as Japanese maple, pruned to an interesting shape against an expanse of wall. Put low shrubs, such as creeping juniper, or Sarococca hookeriana, under a low window.

Leave plenty of space between plants and foundation

There should be about two feet of space between the foliage of a mature foundation planting and the wall of the house. This gives the plants air and light all around, and makes it easy to repaint the walls and wash the windows. A contained planting bed, set away from the house as shown here, helps relate the shrubs to the house without crowding. A gravel mulch between the planting bed and the house cuts down on weeding and keeps soil from splashing on the wall.

HERE'S A NEW SWITCH

Electric switches and outlets aren't what they used to be

By DAVID X. MANNERS

The lamp socket shown above looks very much like any other—from the outside. Inside, a dimming device makes all the difference. At a turn of its switch, it can vary the light of a 150-watt bulb through a complete range from off to full brightness. Any ordinary bulb becomes more versatile than an expensive three-way one.

Only a screwdriver is needed to put this new dimmer socket in place of the existing socket on any table or floor lamp. Like any dimmer, it saves electricity and extends bulb life. Made by Leviton, it sells for under $3.

Wall-switch dimmers have been improved, too. These are the dimmers that fit in the same space as ordinary switches and are just as simple to connect. Moe Light has some that replace the typical three-way switches so that the light that's dimmed can be turned on or off from two or even three locations.

When several dimmers are to be controlled simultaneously, as in a garden or a large living area, motorized equipment is the answer. A touch of the switch starts the tiny motors turning and lights dimming. When lights imperceptibly start dimming in the living room and just as gradually start to come up in the dining room, guests are graciously cued that dinner is about to be served. General Electric makes these.

Ordinary switches have been improved with new varieties of lighted toggles or pushbuttons. One type now in wide use glows when the light it controls is off. It makes the switch easy to locate in the dark. Instead of a glowing toggle, Sylvania illumines the entire switch plate. It can serve as a night light.

The second type of glowing toggle comes on with its light. When lights are remotely located and cannot be seen, it serves as a reminder that lights are on. These "reminding" or pilot switches are now available in a variety of colors. When there is more than one switch, it makes it possible to tell immediately by the color of the glow which light is on. Green can signify the pool lights, red the boiler room, amber the wine cellar, and so on. They are made by Sierra.

Winning favor are switches that are easier to use and distinctive in appearance. When hands are filled with bundles, a touch of the elbow will activate a push switch. Honeywell makes

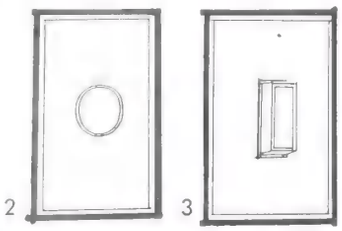
The Millionaire's Popcorn



The extraordinary thing about this "popcorn" is that there's so little popcorn in it. It's mostly nuts. Whole toasted pecans and almonds, exquisitely held together with caramelized sugar and butter. And more butter. And more butter. Actually the popcorn only serves to silence the crunch so you can eat Poppycock in the still of your club, or in your box at the opera. We know one woman so rich she even buys Poppycock for her little millionaire grandchild, though personally we never considered Poppycock a children's confection. Inasmuch as it costs $2.00 a can. It's sold mostly in fancier department and food stores.

a strikingly attractive push switch (2) with a button the size of a quarter. Rodale has a rectangular button (3) that exactly fits the slot in a standard wall plate. In a Bryant model, the entire plate (4) serves as the push switch. There's no button at all.

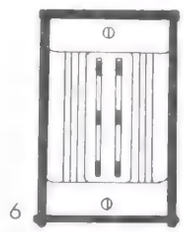
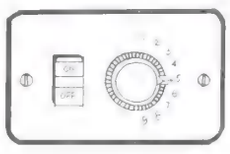
Also gaining popularity: the electrically operated switch, commonly referred to as the "low-voltage switch." It is low voltage that activates the switch. The fixtures and outlets it controls are all on regular house voltage. It has several advantages.



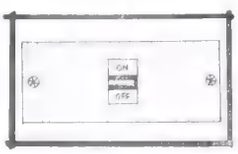
With ordinary switching, controlling a light from more than two or three points is complicated and expensive, requiring the use of much heavy cable. But not with low voltage. It is easy to run any number of small, low-voltage lines to the electrically powered switch, which is usually located near its light or outlet.

Special selective master controls (5) using low voltage will operate as many as a dozen lights, individually or collectively from a single location. They are made by G.E. and others. These controls make it easy to light up a pathway to the house when entering at night, or turn off all lights in the bedroom when retiring. By use of a tiny hand-held transmitter, like that used in opening a garage door, as many as 25 different lights in the house can be controlled without going near a wall switch.

The advent of the completely silent mercury switch has obscured the fact that there still is a place for switches that snap. Where switches control a heavy flow of electricity (to a furnace blower, for example), a mercury switch will not hold up. Nor can it be used in any except a vertical position. For these special uses, a quiet rather than silent switch is recommended.



Of continuing value: the time-delay switch, such as the one made by Edco. It keeps lights on for one minute after they've been turned off, just long enough to get out of the garage or driveway. For more variable control, wall-box time switches permit time-delay settings of from three minutes to 12 hours. Other devices can be programmed to turn lights, fans, or other equipment on or off at any desired hour every day. A timed extension cord will automatically turn off radios, fans, heating pads, or Christmas-tree lights.



Outlets are making news, too. And not only because they now come in more colors to match or contrast with their covering plates. The familiar round shape of the individual outlet has been joined by a square design. In duplex form (6), it becomes rectangular and presents a distinctively different appearance. Both Sierra and Slater make them.

More duplex outlets are being wired so that one half is switch-controlled for a lamp, while the other is permanently on for an electric clock, radio, or the like. More outlets are grounded to give protection against shock hazards and take a three-prong plug. Power tools and equipment with ground prongs can be plugged in directly without use of an adapter.

Recessed outlets (7), long used for hanging electric clocks flush against the wall, have now been discovered as just the thing to use so that cabinets and appliances can be pushed completely against the wall, with no protruding plug to stop them.

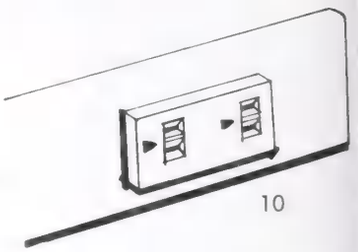
One new outlet combination by Sierra (8), includes both a place to plug in the power cords of TV and FM sets, and a neat plug-in arrangement for their antennas. It eliminates the familiar unsightly tangle of wires.



Electrical codes usually require a wall outlet within 6 feet. Sometimes this is not frequent enough for convenience. Under kitchen cabinets, on work benches, and in many other areas where portable electrical equipment has frequent use, the only answer is a special kind of thin plastic molding that can function as an outlet anywhere along its length. One such system (9), made by Bulldog and called Electrostrip, offers new lock-in-place receptacles that can be inserted in seconds, or just as quickly removed and shifted to a new location. Electrostrips are useful in remodeling; as they are surface-mounted they require no breaking into walls or fishing wires through them.

Another surface outlet system (10), recently introduced, is applied to the wall like a baseboard. Outlets can be placed at two-foot intervals along it. The baseboard (Johnsonite Baseway) is made of vinyl and requires no finish, though it may be painted. It can be used as a supplement to existing wiring.

Unlimited decorative styles: That describes the wealth of new switch and outlet plates. They may be oval, free-form, traditional, contemporary, homey, or sophisticated. They may be gold- or silver-plated, pewter, handcrafted copper or brass, solid wood, or wood-grained. Towne offers ceramic plates that coordinate with doorknobs and drawer pulls.

Plates can be problem solvers. New narrow plates by Sierra (11) can be used for decorative effect or for locations where ordinary plates won't fit. They come as narrow as $1\frac{3}{8}$". They require special narrow boxes, but can accommodate two or three switches or outlets in tandem.

Where standard plates will not fit flush against the wall because of protruding boxes, Sierra's deep plates are the answer. They damaged wall surface, and affords added protection around the switch area. Or it can be used purely as a decorative feature, a flamboyant escutcheon.

Another new variety (13) has a hinged cap to fit over the switch toggle and make it weatherproof.

To make identification of switches easy, marked plates are available for countless standard situations: pool, garden, driveway, hall, basement, pump, etc. Other engraved markings are available on special order.

Before planning to add more outlets and fixtures, it is wise to check if the present electric service is adequate to accommodate them. If more circuits are needed to accommodate additional appliances or equipment, it isn't always necessary to get a bigger box with a higher ampere rating. For electric service that comes through a circuit-breaker box, I-T-E has "duplex breakers" that will make two circuits out of one. The double circuit breakers (14) fit into the same space as the standard single breakers.

EDWARD DURRELL STONE SPEAKS HIS MIND

By LU ALBRECHT

"The whole concept of home building in America is all wrong!" This body blow to the great American dream comes from Edward Durrell Stone, the architectural wizard behind the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts; the Civic Center in New York City; the U.S. Pavilion at the Brussels Fair; the architect who almost singlehandedly put the pierced concrete block into the architectural vocabulary. A man, obviously, who should know.

"In America, we still tend to think like English country squires with everyone trying to build their own little Mount Vernon or Monticello. Now this is simply great if you have an acre or two with which to work. Go right ahead. But we have become a nation of Mount Vernons on 50-by-100-foot lots. We are building for obsolescence instead of for posterity."

Mr. Stone is the first to admit that convincing the American public of his views will be a formidable task. "We have been brain-washed to believe that this type of living is desirable. The average homeowner feels he has 'arrived' if he can sink everything into a house he will outlive. But a change must come—it's inevitable. We are using up all our land on little houses that won't even last a lifetime—let alone be Mount Vernons to pass down to our children. What we should be clamoring for is more beauty, more privacy, more quality. All these things are possible."

Edward Stone is particularly vehement about the destruction of natural beauty in this country. "Miles and miles of little boxes and no planned parks—all the land being gobbled up by ugliness. We're doing away with our natural loveliness without giving anything back in the way of landscaping or parks.

"The thing that should be making the homeowner mad is that he is spending far more than he needs to for all this rapid depreciation and lack of privacy. It's hard for me to believe anyone really likes to look out his window and see miles and miles of laundry."

As quick as he is to condemn our present home-building system, Edward Stone is just as quick to describe what he feels is the only solution for the harassed homeowner and for a countryside being consumed by the bulldozer. "Actually, the solution itself is a simple one—it's the execution that will take time. European and Mediterranean countries never had our abundance of land. Every building had to be carefully planned—and planned to last for generations. France with its cul-de-sac and England with its quadrangle are great illustrations of planned building, and we should take a lesson from them.

"In these countries, almost everything is built wall-to-wall of lasting materials. Houses are clustered—no little boxes standing alone. Of course, France is having a housing problem, but this is only because of a tremendous population explosion—not because their architectural solutions are faulty. You will notice that all new building in the villages and countryside is of the wall-to-wall variety, and on the perimeter of Paris itself, with an occasional exception, high-rise apartments are being built. They are determined to preserve as much as possible of the countryside, at the same time giving the best they can in housing."

What Mr. Stone advocates for the American homeowner is virtually the same thing as has been done in France, Spain, and England, and was done with particular beauty in ancient Pompeii: essentially, houses built wall-to-wall from lasting materials such as brick, stone, or plaster, with good-sized individual ultra-private gardens in the rear of each house. The gardens would be separated from their neighbors by walls, perhaps using Edward Stone's inexpensive but architecturally effective concrete block. He would, however, go further and have us put these houses around a quadrangle with a large park in the center for play as well as beauty. In this way, no houses would open on public roadways.

This solution, he points out, would cut costs all around. Utility costs would come down, personal property maintenance would be far less because of materials used, and home builders would get what they were paying for in the way of privacy and beauty. In addition, all kinds of architectural ramifications would be possible. Houses could be built around an inner courtyard, for instance.

"You would have all the property around you developed at the same time. Schools would be planned into the community. You would get more usable outside space. You know, the way things stand now, people move into their little Monticellos and then they have to worry about what kind of house is going up next door. Another headache is the landscaping—an absolute necessity for beauty and property value. With cluster housing, the landscaping and parks are planned as a part of the whole. Individuality would be expressed in the private walled gardens. Homeowners could stop being janitors and maintenance men. We would use only low-maintenance and high-endurance materials." (Editor's note: See HOUSE BEAUTIFUL's story on "The New Towns" in the September issue.)

Edward Stone admits that wall-to-wall housing does, inevitably, conjure up visions of the old-fashioned row house—those dismal structures strung out for miles and usually seen in the poorer sections of large cities. "The old idea of the row house was a start in the right direction, but only a start. None of the amenities were even considered. What we advocate is complete planning. The wall-to-wall idea is a good one, but you can't just string them out in a row and forget about them.

"However, it must be remembered that when it was first built, the row house seemed the perfect solution to the problem of the greatest amount of housing in limited space. Row houses can be quite elegant. Look at parts of Boston's Back Bay. For that matter, I live in a New York City brownstone—a row house, to be sure. It's the handling of the wall-to-wall idea that counts. You might say that the old-fashioned row house is to my plan what these little houses on little lots are to Mount Vernon or Monticello."

Mr. Stone feels that "the villain in the piece is, of course, our archaic zoning regulations. When a neighborhood is zoned for residential building, side-lot restrictions are immediately set up. So the only place left to build cluster housing is in areas zoned for apartments. These are too prohibitive in cost even to discuss. If the government would start financing sensible housing, as they do the little boxes we are forced to build now, then the average homeowner would end up with all the things he wants and so seldom gets."

Although he says we must change our concept of home building to save our country from architectural chaos, Edward Stone does not agree with those forecasters who predict that we are going to become a nation of renters rather than owners.

"Of course, we are an increasingly mobile nation and our executives are being transferred all over the country every day. But buying a house is the sensible thing to do. A man builds an equity in this property for the money he is putting out. I see it every day when we send a young man to California on a job, for instance. The first thing he does is buy a house. He could rent, but he doesn't usually want to. When the job is finished and he is ready to leave, he sells the house. It's just smarter to buy than rent. I believe that emotionally, too, people want to own."

But whether we rent or buy, Edward Stone wants us to do something sensible about our housing mess. "What difference does it make if they are duplexes or semi-apartments or simply private houses built wall-to-wall. The beauty of this plan is that it's so adaptable. At the same time that a man would be getting more for his housing dollar, he would be building a permanent heritage of beauty which is the moral obligation of all of us, don't you think?" ■

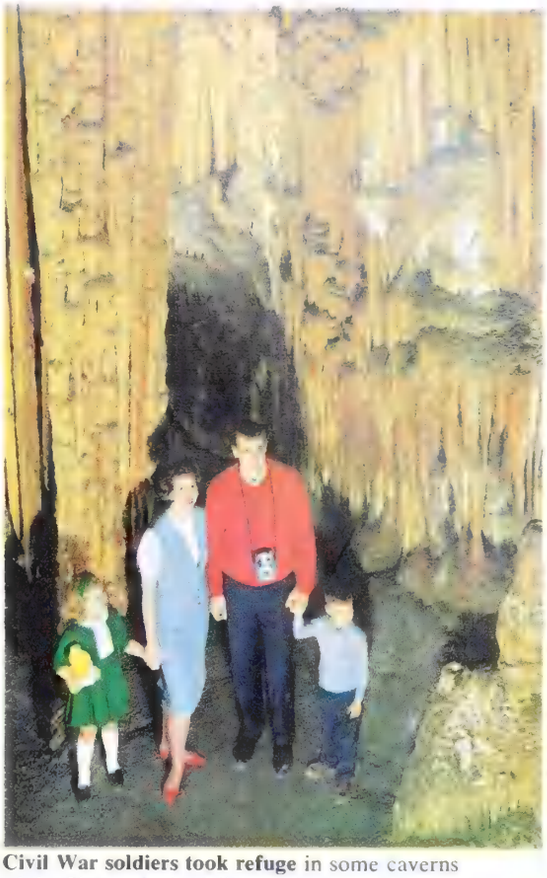
Brilliant white, cool-shadowed, romantic as the palace of a medieval bey, the Hotel Fourati in Hammamet, seaside town of garden villas. Left, enchanting door to a government guest house.

A TASTE OF TUNISIA



Whenever that happy future time comes when we are free to head for a sun-filled seaside vacation, we shall return with pleasure to Tunisia, specifically to Hammamet, on the Mediterranean gulf of the same name. We shall have booked ourselves into a white and domed pavilion called the Hotel Fourati, where floors are marble tile and the bedroom furniture inlaid with mother-of-pearl. Its site is a clearing in a citrus grove bordering a mile-long beach, so the scent of orange blossom rides on the salt breeze. The hotel patio is a paved garden of calla lilies, roses, and slender cypress, with pools and fountains and a giralda tower, like the medieval alcazars in storybooks. There are camels on the beach, and a definite hint of Sigmund Romberg in the air, and those of a certain age may call to mind the picture of Marlene Dietrich stumbling gracefully into the sands, chiffon veils floating in the desert wind. Along with this romantic lagniappe and the sun-tanned bikini life, a room here and three good meals a day cost about $6.

To change the pace on occasion, you may always take a camel ride along the beach or sail the gulf. There are excursions to be taken into the little white-walled, blue-shuttered town itself, and to the neighboring towns, to Narbeul, for example, which has been a crafts center since way back. The workshops invite visitors, and don't importune you to buy what you don't want. Pottery is a specialty, notably a mustard-yellow paste and a certain white-glaze-on-terra-cotta cutout work that makes pretty, shadow-casting lanterns for candles. Ladies of the town are famous for their embroidery and lace, while those gentlemen who are metalworkers turn out lace of a sort in wrought-iron grilles. Another local skill is the weaving of rush into rugs and mats and baskets of many sorts and sizes. We chose a tall tambour shape, which is now an umbrella holder, having also served as a lightweight carrying case for accumulated souvenirs. In the springtime, we are told, Narbeul turns its hand aromatically to the making of perfume.

FOCUS on DECORATION

Somewhere east of the architect and west of the decorator stands someone at a high desk or a great noisy rhythmic loom . . . and what they are creating may be the chair you will sit on or the fabric you will hem. Theirs is the immense excitement and responsibility of making what never was before and what may last long beyond this generation as a touchstone to how things really were in the last half of the Twentieth Century—The Age of Taste and Distaste. Theirs to find their way among the schools and fads and fetishes and credos that slam bang up against each other claiming Authority . . . theirs the challenge to emerge with something worth it all. In this October issue, we honor Seven Compleat Designers.

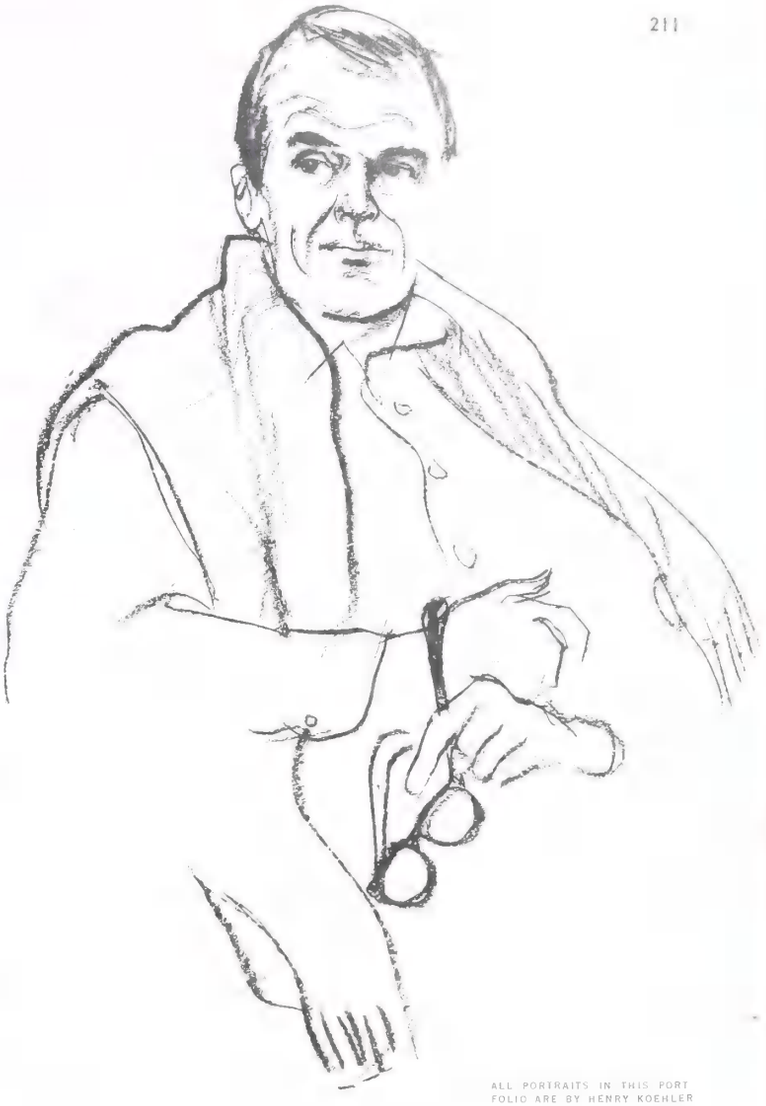
Charles Eames.

HIS CREATION OF FORMS HAS CHANGED THE WAY WE SIT, STORE THINGS,



The clean-limbed, dynamic designs of Charles Eames epitomize the functionalism that is one of the traditions of modern furniture. Below, four of his seemingly sparse—though utterly comfortable—armchairs are spaced around his pedestal table.

BUILD, PLAY, TEACH, AND LEARN.

By DIANA WALTON

ALL PORTRAITS IN THIS PORTFOLIO ARE BY HENRY KOEHLER

What is an idea? Charles Eames, who lives for, and by, good ideas, could almost be called an idea designer. He carries an idea to its logical conclusion and then gives it dimension. His creation of forms has changed the way we sit, store things, build, play, teach, and learn. He takes on only those problems he genuinely cares about, and solves them in his own highly personal terms. His clients find that many people have been waiting for just such solutions. His far-reaching achievements in the field of design—including his famous form-fitting chairs of molded plywood, tubular steel, and wire mesh—have brought him and his wife and collaborator, Ray Kaiser Eames, the most significant awards in the design field for their total contribution to the world of design. However, Eames remains best known for the series of chairs that bear his name.

In 1946, at the first one-man show ever given by the Museum of Modern Art, his chairs made such a sweeping impact as the epitome of all that was honest and functional in modern design that they became the biggest sellers of any furniture in the world. They are still so widely bought that each of more than two million Americans could simultaneously find one to sit in. It also says something for the permanence of good ideas—good design—that the original dies for the uniquely curved, softly voluptuous seats are still being used.

"A good design," Eames has said, "must have an objective. Originality for its own sake can only be disastrous. If you pursue an objective—say, a chair—to its logical conclusion, then you can get something good." With a deprecatory grin he adds, "It isn't easy, because between recognition of an objective—which is in itself a big accomplishment—and its logical conclusion are difficulties and many mistakes."

One logical conclusion well reached by Eames has been his chair. It has become a sort of Model T of modern furniture. You see it as the public seating in all kinds of buildings, from airline terminals to churches to art museums. It can be found in living rooms, kitchens, and bedrooms all over the world. In the beginning, Eames contributed a great deal of his own time and money toward convincing the public of his design ideas. He built models and exhibitions, gave lectures and interviews (which he detests). Now it is almost a household word—the eameschair—commonly used to refer to any one of half a dozen of his chairs.

To be strictly accurate, the eameschair is the one that has two carved panels of molded plywood bolted to a simple metal tube support. But to some it means the molded fiber-glass chair that balances on wire struts. To others it is the absolutely luxurious rosewood and black leather lounge chair and ottoman, both of which swivel on chrome-plated legs. Only the price of the lounge chair keeps it from being as prevalent as other Eames chairs. It pains Eames to be reminded that it costs 30 times more than his other chairs. But it wasn't created to (Please turn the page)

be sold—it was originally designed as a gift for his friend, movie director Billy Wilder. Once it had been seen, everybody wanted one. Herman Miller, who manufactures all Eames furniture, can barely keep up with the demand. Copies have sprung up like mushrooms in the spring. Also on the market are Eames dormitory units, tables, and couches, not to mention his marvelous toys for children. Coming later this year will be updated versions of his 1954 storage units.

Headquarters for Eames is a nondescript, anonymous (no name on the door) one-story former garage on Santa Monica's southern fringe. Inside, the place seems part sound stage, part drafting room, and part Santa's workshop because of the merry profusion of toys, colors, games, pictures, and wonderful objects that cover every wall. There is even an extraordinarily pleasant kitchen and dining room, where the entire staff lunches. (Eames hates to eat in restaurants.) But overall and essentially it is an idea factory.

Lately Eames and his wife have been devoting their own and their staff's time to ideas about the presentation of ideas. A visualized historical survey of Nehru's life and his India was a recent project. Another was the People Wall and exhibits for IBM's pavilion at last year's New York World's Fair. Before that, there was the dazzlingly original seven-screen projection of ideas about the U.S. presented at the Moscow Fair. In three museums, copies of his History Wall, a forty-foot-long kind of pictograph, charts the lives of great mathematicians and their contributions in chronological relationship to architecture, religion, art, politics, and the great landmarks of their time. It is a supremely logical narrative that makes history seem a personal experience shared with all mankind, rather than something in a dusty book.

Eames has an enormous (Please turn to page 270)

The Eameses have filled their California house with things they delight in looking at—often from surprising vantages. In their living room, top, a painting floats over an Eames lounge chair for logical tilt-back viewing. Three variations on his basic chair are shown above, flanked by stacks of their simple component parts. Eames creates intricate toys to explain difficult concepts. Edward J. Wormley

BEFORE HIS LIGHT AND AIRY NINE-FOOT DESIGN, THE BIG SOFA ALWAYS LOOKED AS IF A WHALE HAD BEEN BEACHED IN THE LIVING ROOM.

For 35 years, Edward Wormley, with his manufacturing associates at Dunbar, has turned out collection after collection of supremely comfortable furniture that has been thoroughly modern in spirit and concept while also incorporating his knowledge, love, and appreciation of the great styles of the past. It is not unlikely that this concern with comfort stems from Wormley's personal graciousness. His friends count him an expansive host and a delightful guest, and comfort in furniture can easily be likened to good manners in people. Both communicate an aura of well-being and ease. Both proffer a friendly invitation, inspire confidence and relaxation, and make the world seem far more pleasant.

Much of Wormley's work has been of consummate beauty and impeccable design that has deserved and won for him every honor in his field. However, it has not been only the breathtaking rightness of frequently extraordinary pieces that has brought him the undisputed title of dean of American furniture designers, but rather the cumulative impact of 35 years of continuous growth and consistently high performance. Characteristically, Wormley shares the credit. "I've been extremely lucky to have been able to work with one firm all these years, because," he explains, "it gives a designer an opportunity to take a chance. He can refine and improve a basically good idea for the next collection or, if necessary, throw it out."

Wormley's ideas have had a vital influence on American design that is to be seen in every room in the house, in many new pleasures that would today seem a hardship to be without.

The nine-foot sofa was the masterpiece of a 1949 collection. Before his light and airy version, anything approaching such a length looked as if a whale had been beached in the living room. He then accompanied it by a table, narrow as a skiff, to run its length. Wormley restructured chairs to a new roomy 40" deep. His graceful "A" chair is a superb redesigning of a classic into the modern idiom.

He has conceived hundreds of different chairs and countless tables that satisfied needs only vaguely felt until they were filled. There were tables that stacked, stored, and flipped, and ones that opened out from the width of a board to accommodate a banquet. Tables shaped like a sheaf of wheat, a circle, square, wedge, triangle, curve, or oblong—all with a specific use. Another Wormley innovation was to place a dining buffet sideboard on (Please turn the page) wheels—a simple idea that more than tripled its uses.

So much furniture and the ways of using it, which we take absolutely for granted as having always been around, were actually conceived or given their modern form by Edward Wormley. And there is not a gimmick or gadget to any of them. All his furniture performs the dignified function of making living more convenient, i.e., comfortable. There is the open invitation of more luxurious chairs, or chairs for specific purposes, like the Mr.-and-Mrs. designs. Chests that are finished front and back so that they can be angled out from a wall. Drawers that are where you need them to be easily reached. In these photographs, a review of highlights in Wormley-designed furniture. 1. and 2. A chair and table, both from the Janus Collection, introduced in 1957. They illustrate Wormley's interest and care in the detailing and joining of wood. In both pieces, subtle modeling from part to part creates a sculptural whole. The table, a design of ultimate simplicity, gains character and distinction with a softly contoured flute, continuous from apron to legs. Ceramic tiles by Natzler accent the top. 3. Wormley likes to use exotic woods as accents, usually with walnut or mahogany. Here, East Indian rosewood is woven into panels for the doors of a darkly lacquered walnut cabinet, a 1964 design. 4. The "A" chair, first introduced in 1954, is refined in this later version. The frame is given extra strength with laminated construction of the curved part that forms the arm and back. 5. The classic nine-foot sofa, his 1949 masterpiece, continues to hold its elevated position. Its elegance and lightness of scale had previously been unknown in so large a piece of upholstered furniture. 6. Wormley's most recent achievement, so new it barely outraced the deadline for this issue, is Dunbar's latest "Compatibles" group. Never have framing and upholstery been more beautifully related. Framing is oiled ash. This complete group is designed to a more delicate scale, and makes Wormley furniture now available at a more reasonable price than ever before. At Lord & Taylor and other fine department stores.

Dorothy Liebes

SHE CREATES BEAUTY AS EFFORTLESSLY AS A BEE MAKES HONEY.

By RELMAN MORIN

This story of one woman's impact on millions of homes and on a gigantic industry, the story of a quiet revolution, engineering breakthroughs and international renown, began with a blind from a Japanese temple, in her girlhood home in California.

The blind had long been a cherished possession. One day, her mother noticed that it was losing its shape. Closer inspection revealed that the brown silken threads, artfully woven into it, had broken and were unraveling. The reeds sagged. The years, perhaps abetted by the fogs of the Golden Gate, had taken their toll. Tout passe, tout casse, tout lasse. But the woman was not prepared to accept this inexorable truth. She said to her daughter: "Dorothy, do you suppose you could reweave this? I can't bear to see it going to pieces."

Dorothy Wright, who was then in her teens, carried the blind upstairs to the attic in the rambling family home. She had painted the floor lilac and the window frames turquoise blue. Thus transformed, the attic had become a studio. A loom, on which she had made her first faltering attempts at weaving, stood in the center of the floor.

As she studied the problem of repairing the blind, a thought came to her. Why brown threads? They were handsome enough, to be sure, but perhaps some other color would be more beautiful. She began experimenting with color combinations. At last she found one that seemed true and right: lacquer red, black, and white. She rewove her mother's blind, and it hung for many more years in the house in Berkeley.

Color has always been synonymous with Dorothy Liebes' designs, and her New York studio looks as though that is where the rainbow lives. Spools of yarn in a gay profusion of singing colors line the walls. At the touch of her loom they will be woven into an unmistakably Liebes fabric, slatted blind, pillow covering, design for wallpaper, or one of her bold new rug patterns.

Relman Morin, a Special Correspondent for the Associated Press, has won two Pulitzer Prizes. He is the author of many books, including the current biography, Winston Churchill, and the soon-to-be-published Dwight D. Eisenhower, A Gauge of Greatness.

RICHARD JEFFERY

Beginnings are always mysterious, as Rachel Carson observed in her study of the sea. The simple event in the attic-studio can be narrated but not explained. The artist "sees" a unity of color, form, and design, and the act of creation follows. Why did she "see" the blind in other colors? There is no answer, except to say that she did. In any case, from that beginning, more than 40 years ago, flowed the astonishing train of events that constitutes the career of the woman now known in the worlds of textiles, interior design, home furnishings, and textile engineering, as Dorothy Liebes.

"When I hear the name 'Dorothy Liebes,' " says a public-relations counselor for a number of firms in these fields, "I immediately (Please turn the page) think of color—vibrant color, sharp orange and pink, blue-green, perhaps purple. But her colors are often subtle, too. She has a tremendous range. Her great impact, which began to be felt in the late 1930's, has been as a colorist."

He recalled his first sight of her designs. She had brought packing cases of her work from her studio in San Francisco—a real studio now—and installed an exhibition in a suite of rooms in the Gotham Hotel in New York. "I walked in," he said, "and was dumbfounded. Simply dazzled."

But the question was: How would textile manufacturers, and consumers, and housewives react to this explosion of color? Would not a chaise, a rug, or draperies in these brilliant hues make the rest of the house look drab? For a long time, designers had been conservative, using muted, pallid palettes. They were afraid that people could not live with bright color. The "California look," as Dorothy Liebes then called it, was fresh, imaginative, daring. But would it be accepted? A textile-industry publication was soon to answer the question. "For the past several years," it reported, "Dorothy Liebes, a San Francisco designer, has been quietly raising the standards of public taste in America."

Before the first flickerings of recognition, however, there were long years of struggle, hard work, discouragements, setbacks. At one point, she literally worked an 18-hour day, teaching art at Columbia University in the daytime and weaving until long past midnight in her apartment in Greenwich Village, which she shared with two women friends. She was determined to go to Paris to study with the celebrated French designer Rodier, and to study the art galleries in the City of Light. She saved part of her teacher's salary and went around New York, selling the things she wove at night. Eventually, having amassed a few hundred dollars, the dream of Paris came true.

Even after the studio in San Francisco was established and began to grow, a long, rocky road lay ahead. Acclaim did not come overnight in the world of art, and when her work took her into industry there were heartaches and cruel disappointments—which, after the first shock, she threw off with her unquenchable optimism.

It is a truism, of course, that public interiors affect public taste. The phenomenon, often remarked, is an elusive but positive force. When Dorothy Liebes' creations began to appear—in hotels and theatres, fashionable restaurants, nightclubs and churches, in mighty transatlantic liners—architects, decorators, and Mrs. America found color and combinations of color in new dimensions. They saw what had been considered "clashing" colors in her designs. "Nature combines clashing colors," Dorothy Liebes often says, "and you have to go some to outdo Nature." And they saw low-key and high-key effects, intense colors, turquoise blue and Kelly green instead of pale blue and anemic green. The awareness of these innovations seeped into public consciousness but, except for the professionals, most of those influenced did not even realize it.

Moreover, the Liebes look (she moved her studio from California to New York in 1948) was no passing fad. Of the décor in the S.S. United States, installed in the liner in 1951, Rita Reif wrote in The New York Times recently: "The blue-and-green textile palette of the 990-foot liner . . . weathered all the tonal fashions of the 1950's and sailed successfully into the 1960's." The same can be said of Dorothy Liebes' upholstery in the lobby and public rooms of the Hotel Pierre, her draperies in the Persian Room of the Hotel Plaza, both in New York, and other work in hotels across the country, where they have been seen for many years.

George Nelson

HE BELIEVES IT IS THE RESPONSIBILITY OF TODAY'S DESIGNER TO DEVELOP AN ARTIST'S OUTLOOK ON THE MODERN WORLD.

By ELIZABETH BROWN

Innovative . . . controversial . . . and most of all, a tradition breaker, George Nelson has blazed new design paths throughout the home-furnishings field during the past 20 years. His radical concepts have added new dimensions to the field of modern interior and industrial styling by serving as the forerunners for the future.

He approaches home furnishings with a philosophy of simplicity derived from architecture, emphasizing form and function. Behind all his designs is an acute awareness of how people live and an anticipation of their need for space and economy of clutter. It is the responsibility of a designer, he has said, to develop an artist's outlook on the modern world to integrate the different views of scientist, mathematician, and creative artist.

He has brought to home furnishings a crisp spareness, almost Japanese in viewpoint. Furnishings, he believes, should be treated as tools—much as a chain saw, ballpoint pen, or dump truck. In a soft, low-keyed tone that belies the intensity of his convictions, Mr. Nelson explains: "When a tool is embellished, it becomes a non-tool, ersatz, an escape from reality. Today we are in a period of nostalgia. People are looking backward. They don't want furnishings and equipment to be real, but wrapped in a covering reminiscent of the past."

Lack of clutter and embellishment are two distinct Nelson trademarks whether in the design of homes, offices, or furniture. He uses his 30 years as architect, designer, editor, and author to support his views that the home should be treated as a total design element, its architecture and furnishings incorporated to create flowing, open spaces. He frees rooms by eliminating traditional heavy furniture and replacing it by new pieces created as an integral part of the room. His upholstered furniture also reflects a Japanese influence—low, lightly framed (Please turn the page)

Two pieces from George Nelson's most recent furniture collection for Herman Miller reveal the designer's emphasis on clean, simple lines. Plump cushions are cradled in a chromed steel frame to create a modern love seat. Rounded corners of the frame—and of the Italian granite top on the coffee table—soften the look.

That furniture should have multiple uses, again a Japanese concept, is evident throughout Mr. Nelson's work. Modular pieces, whether for seating or storage, are created to be used as a group or individually.

Mr. Nelson has been called the seer of modern living, the champion and innovator of space- and work-saving ideas. By departing from traditional techniques, he has made a lasting impression on the total furnishings field. But today, Mr. Nelson is disturbed by our affluent society's preoccupation with the past. Furnishings have replaced the automobile as the status symbol. "People would prefer bad reproductions of the past to real contemporary furnishings," he said.

A believer that all home furnishings would be far better if they were invisible, George Nelson made his first significant mark on the field with the Storage Wall System of 1945. Controversial because it was radical—considered too sleek and austere for its time—it was an innovation that continues to affect contemporary furnishings.

The flexible, modular system of interchangeable sectional components was created to incorporate a space-saving storage area as a decorative element, to take the place of several pieces of furniture normally used. The Storage Wall and its successor, the Basic Storage Component, designed in 1949, were statements by example of his belief that furnishings should be built into the total home structure.

George Nelson set off another storm with the introduction of the Food Preparation Center, the single unit that incorporated what is considered today the ultimate in modern kitchens. Radically new in 1945, many of the features envisioned by Mr. Nelson still have not been accepted today. The Center boasted components that would serve specific functions—ice making, vertical broiling, separate freezing, storage. The Food Center was created with its planned work and storage areas to cut down housework through good design.

Paul Tuttle

HE RETAINS AN UTTER DELIGHT IN THE WOOD FEELS, AND HOW ONE PERSON

The furniture designs of Paul Tuttle are a fresh and arresting blend of delicacy and strength, of cool dynamics and warm graciousness. The body-hugging, caned chair, top left, is an example. Laminated wood frame and horsehair upholstery become one in a later design, top right. Above, for a beach house, dining furniture using structural elements to form the design. Above right, a cantilevered Z-line chair Tuttle calls the "Rocket Launcher," now being manufactured. He considers the wood and metal chair, right, too humorous to be produced in any great number. It was designed for his Retrospective show at the Pasadena Museum. Side table, far right, is a continuous convolution of rigid metal uprights topped with ¾" glass. In many of his chairs the legs extend to form the arms, as below. The table was meant to grow out of its well like a plant; deep notches hint at petals.

WAY GRASS GROWS, SEA SHELLS CURVE, DIFFERS FROM ANOTHER.

Paul Tuttle's name is not a household word, but it is easy to imagine that his furniture will be the prized antiques of, say, 2066. His designs are ruthlessly personal. Their disciplined yet romantic shapes impart an emotional impact that is almost tender in a tough, uncompromising way. His work achieves a warmth and esthetic appeal that can be found only in design that is based on a unified idea. The concept inherent in Paul Tuttle's work and that directs his entire life is the beauty of simplicity.

He lives in a delightful one-room house of his own design perched in a cleft in the rolling, lupine-covered Santa Barbara hills of California (see House Beautiful, July 1965). He is a slight, spare-framed man, who in his forties retains an utter delight in the way grass grows, sea shells curve, wood feels, and one person differs from another. It is doubtful that he has ever had an enemy. He lives simply and serenely in an almost Spartan manner, ploughing most of his resources—and windfalls such as last year's Carson Pirie Scott's Young Designer award—into having prototypes of his furniture built. He has an extravagant inner richness that prompted one of his many dedicated friends to call him "the most successful unsuccessful person I know. Paul lives the way all of us once hoped we would."

Paul Tuttle designs what he wants to, and only that. Things he doesn't like are never a challenge to him; they simply do not interest him. It would be impossible for him to conform to mass-production needs—calling for a repetition of motif or demanding a 90″ dresser because 90″ dressers are selling this season—and he doesn't try. It isn't that he doesn't care about money or recognition, it's that he cares what he has to do for it. He is a more-than-good sculptor. "Often, my need to do a house (he has built several, has two in the process now) or a new piece of furniture is a way to extend a shape I have worked out in clay," he says. "Architecture is taking up more of my time these days, but it always leads me back to furniture because I always design some for each house."

Many of these tables and chairs were temporarily plucked out of living and dining rooms early this fall to be displayed in the Pasadena Museum of Art's Paul Tuttle Retrospective. Eudorah Moore, the curator of design, says: "We feel in a sense we were lucky enough to discover Paul. The first of his work we showed—an exquisite, slim armchair—was in our 1960 California Designer's Exhibit. It was a large group, more than 200 pieces, but everyone remembers and talks about that chair. It's back in this show—and still as exciting, still as different, because his designs never copy themselves. Each one is a creation rather than part of an evolution."

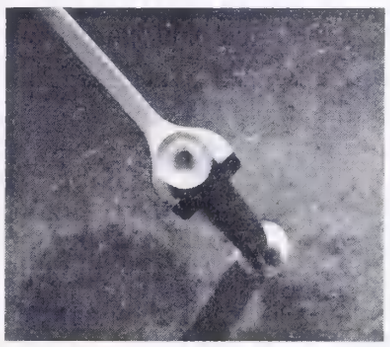
The country's younger designers who know his work well and admire it (Please turn to page 270)

Ward Bennett

By PHYLLIS LEE LEVIN

The Ward Bennett "environment" is eclectic, distilled, swept of gadgets, pruned of indulgence, and intensely personal. "If someone wants fringed draperies," the designer says squarely, "I'm the wrong man." If a person values serenity and understands quality rather than period, then he is up to the Bennett environment. This means, in the designer's words, a house for "quiet creativity, not irritations, not distractions." It also means a "single window to write by, a dark place in which to sleep—almost medieval—and a place in every home for working." The Bennett environment fervently embraces junipers and pear trees, green vines and horizons of field and sky; it is on intimate, never awesome, terms with all art, whether it be of great or penny value.

Astonishingly, the hand is light and the pruning makes the room bloom. The Bennett room is more inclined to be nostalgic than clinical despite its thoroughly, almost tautly disciplined scheme. Yet the stone-walled barn evokes Provence, and the white-washed concrete beach house conjures up remembrances of a Mexican summer. Even the New York apartment with its elegant urban manner tells of its owner's love of ancient sculpture and faraway islands.



You can read a Ward Bennett room as you read biography, to know the hero or heroine more intimately. "A room, a home ought to reflect the interests or anything else about the person who lives there," Bennett says. "Einstein's home was a mess—books, papers—it was awash with them," the designer recalls. "Tobacco was spilled all over the place. I mean it was a mess. But it was a beautiful mess. You see, it was a man." By contrast, Bennett admires the château of a Rothschild baroness—ornate, feminine, gilded, because it, too, "has to do with somebody."

It is not easy to define the art of Bennett's own furniture designs. Chaste, they are never cold; understated, they tell a world about craftsmanship. They are evolutionary rather than revolutionary. Bennett is fond of looking at his own work, and in answer to admiring noises of the uninitiated, he says with abrupt pride: "They're nothing really, just like good umbrellas." And another time: "They could have been designed 20 years ago, or 20 years from now." A young student of furniture design recently evaluated Bennett's own designs as "the antiques of tomorrow."

If the furniture he uses is beautifully made, though self-effacing—he does mix in period furniture, but not much, because "we don't live period lives"—his colors are equally muted. Warm, stained-glass-in-the-sun colors—deep reds, taupes, ambers—are what he favors. These, and the shades of the earth. He is attracted to low-ceilinged areas, subtle lighting, fur, straw, crude and costly wood. The fascination of his work lies in the play of textures and materials, his sense of grand and homely space. Bennett's verdant imagination turned a wretched dining corner in a cell-like new apartment into a cornerstone for living. The area was fitted with a platform, piled with a mattress, and heaped with plants. The outcome was a reading, thinking, and dreaming niche, a most private place, literally a treehouse above a concrete New York sidewalk. The niche is one more bit of ammunition Bennett packs against what he calls "the loss of privacy because of extensive communication, the disappearance of the home as our grandparents knew it."

Perhaps the designer's message is communicated most succinctly by visiting him at home. Ward Bennett lives in what can only be described inadequately as the most luxurious garret in the world. From a maze of rooftop quarters, Bennett has composed his own space tower, with the sky (Please turn to page 279)

T. H. Robsjohn-Gibbings

HE PROVIDES A GLIMPSE OF THAT AGELESS BEAUTY WHICH IS REVEALED ONCE IN A WHILE, YET SEEMS ALWAYS TO HAVE BEEN.

By MARION GOUGH

It is not at all surprising. With the same consistency that has always marked his design and his behavior, T. H. Robsjohn-Gibbings has now chosen to live and work in Greece. From the terrace of his Athens apartment, he looks to the Acropolis. And through this brilliant air, one imagines that the Parthenon communicates to him, in pure clarity, a perpetual confirmation of the very message he has been telling the world in words and furniture for more than 30 years. The unchanging message: Simplicity is beauty and beauty is timeless.

His early studies of the classics spurred him to this conviction. Indeed, the clean Attic line is evident in almost everything he has ever done, and it seems almost inevitable that his most recent, mature designs should have taken their forms directly from the furniture of ancient Greece and the simplest peasant furniture of the Greek islands.

He arrived on the American scene from his native England in 1929, having begun his career as an interior designer specializing in the restoration of period country mansions and townhouses. He was imported, so to speak, by the brothers Duveen, those almost legendary dealers in art and antiques, who recognized a knowledgeable young man when they saw one. In point of fact, he came almost as a fugitive from that same knowledgeability, suffering from a surfeit of linen-fold oak, claw feet, riband backs, ormolu frames, and whatever else might mark the period pieces considered de rigueur in English great houses during the twenties.

Actually, on his arrival here, he was often called upon to assist in the same kind of futile, anachronistic period worship, a condition that determined him to open his own design office. This he did in 1936, after a few more years of study in France, Italy, and Germany. For ten years he concentrated on creating "total environments," simultaneously designing furniture and interiors for clients who number some of the country's most discriminating families and, not incidentally, some of the wealthiest. From these efforts evolved a fresh, contemporary kind of design which expressed the Gibbings rejection of both "modernism" and "traditionalism," propounding instead his tenet of faith, that simplicity is beauty. For he believes that simplicity is the ultimate development to which we hope to come when we are truly developed human beings, when we have seen all, experienced much, and are well enough informed, i.e. sophisticated enough, to make authoritative choices. He believes that eventually we will come to know a timeless simplicity that is beauty, the essence that Keats found in a Grecian urn, the indefinable character that assures the unfailing appeal of a Chinese fret, a Revere spoon, a Moorish arch, no matter in what era one finds them. Out of his custom furniture of this period came the seeds of the commercial designs he made for the Widdicomb Company between 1946 and 1960. In 1961, he designed a group of furniture for the Baker Furniture Company. (Almost all these pieces have been shown in House Beautiful as they were introduced to the market over the years.)

One of the most telling proofs of his theory on the durability of simplicity is Mr. Gibbings' famous chair, shown above. It first saw the light of day in 1936, is as esthetically desirable 30 years later.

Looking back, there are those who feel that Mr. Gibbings—Gibby to his friends, the T. H. still unrevealed—arrived on our scene not one moment too soon. As time proved, he brought a vigorous, moderate newness to the design of furniture and interiors. But he also supplied—in the forties, when it was much needed—the tart and truthful voice and the witty, barbed pen that laid bare esthetic pretensions of every ilk then prevalent. Whatever he considered an affront to honest design and good sense he took on, via the lecture platform, in simple conversation, or in print, outraging the keepers of the sacred cows of whatever persuasion. In his Goodbye, Mr. Chippendale, he devastatingly dismantled the snobbism of the die-hard traditionalists, pulling, as one critic put it, "the bergère chairs from under the musty dowagers

Never before such a floor show of fashions! A great cast of rugs and carpeting is appearing now with news in pattern, color, fiber, texture. Shag takes an encore in fresh versions. At the other extreme, smooth weaves, extra-flat. On these and the following ten pages, significant glimpses of what's going on the floor. A garden's worth of flowers. More borders, including the improvised, perhaps because so many current rugs are, like other works of art, frame-deserving. Marvelous colors, soft to blazing, some of the most subtle brilliance arrived at through pointilliste technique. Designs just created. Designs in translation, free or faithful. An ancient pattern seen in a new guise. There is much richness here. You'll find it stimulating.

On this page and opposite, three examples of vigorous design translated into contemporary fashions made for the floor. "Westminster," left, a wool area rug from Calla-way's Exploration International Collection, turns forceful Gothic grace into an off-center composition, a work of art that could be wall-hung rather than walked upon. From Cabin Crafts' custom collection of rugs, the giant-plaid below echoes, in Acrilan and modacrylic fibers, the upholstery in a coordination that unifies the room and gives it a more spacious air. "Porteau," the fringed wool rug by Karastan, opposite page, is a new version of an old Oriental pattern. Weaving it in an unexpected white and black instead of in the usual color combinations transports the familiar design out of times past into time present, and so puts a zingy new emphasis on its elegance.

Carpets created for outdoors? What an idea! What a good idea! Where does a house stop, anyway? A lot of living goes on beyond the four walls, on terraces and sundecks, in patios and gardens, around pools. Furniture designed just for these locales has become an essential. Now, along with the furniture, the carpet steps out. A special breed of carpet that needs no babying. The alfresco carpet—carefree, durable, weather-resistant. To be put down on a smooth surface and left there, in the open.

Recently developed fibers make all this possible. It is already clear that the developers have a hit on their hands. More than half a dozen felted or tufted nonwoven varieties are available, and more are on the way. To cover wide surfaces, mats are stitched together. The result is non-mildewing and unfazed by rain, sun, stains, heavy traffic.

The swatches opposite suggest that green is the color of the true alfresco carpet. But not the only one. Now, or soon, outdoor carpeting may be matched to sky or sand, grape or apricot, zinnia or chrysanthemum.

The first big season for the alfresco carpet is about to begin. Gazebos, patios, cabanas, and all that, in Southern resorts and other mild-winter areas, can enjoy a new dimension in décor. And it is not too early for staying-North families to be planning for the days to come. Remembering that many a piece of "garden" furniture has led a second life indoors, it comes as no surprise that the extramural carpet can be intramural, too. Moisture- and dirt-resistance make it a sensible choice for a weekend cottage at the shore, a hunter's hideaway, a ski lodge.

There is little doubt about the sturdiness of alfresco carpeting. It is laid, and takes traffic calmly, in such busy public places as supermarkets, and major-league baseball is played on it in Houston's Astrodome. The attractions of a country estate may some day include, along with babbling [illegible] and wooded hills, a tree-lined driveway covered in carpeting.

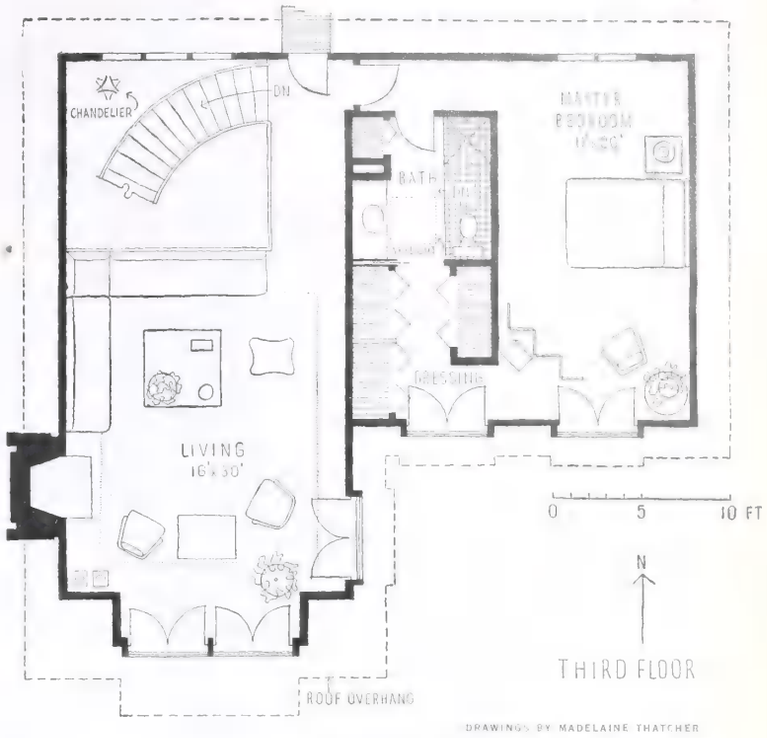
HIGH-RISING TOWNHOUSE

By JAMES DE LONG

Standing tall above its steeply sloping site on Seattle's Queen Anne Hill, this forthright, vertical townhouse is gracefully assimilated into architectural surroundings from a bygone era of Seattle history. Once known as Galer's Hill, after a first settler, the section gradually acquired its present name because of an earlier blooming of mansions designed in the style of the Queen Anne period. The successful blending of this bold, vital house of the present with its dreaming neighbors of the past is tribute to the respectful taste and vision of its owner, Interior Designer Roy Strom, and his architect, Ralph D. Anderson.



Mr. Strom chose a small, difficult plot—one of the few open spaces overlooked on the teeming old hill—that had, nevertheless, a spectacular view of blue and busy Puget Sound and the pulsing center of downtown Seattle. A native of the forested Northwest, he wanted a mostly-wood house, designed with utmost simplicity and economy of materials to offset the higher costs of hillside construction.

What he got fulfilled these basic conditions—and then went far beyond them. From the outside, the disciplined, almost austere, format of the soaring, three-tiered structure powerfully complements the ascending beauty within, where curving staircases rise through the open continuum of a space-flooded interior. Everywhere, the natural, pervading warmth of wood softens and tempers the cool, monastic simplicity of the total design. More on the next two pages

NEW YORK'S TRIPLE HARVEST

APPLES

By HELEN McCULLY

Although the apple has existed since prehistoric times, Spencer Beach, in his authoritative work, The Apples of New York, says: "The original home of the apple is not definitely known, but it is probably indigenous to the region south of the Caucasus, in the U.S.S.R." This much we are sure of: The first apple seeds were brought to America by the early colonists three hundred years ago. Beach comments: "The earliest recorded grafted apple tree was planted, in 1647, by Governor Stuyvesant in New Amsterdam (now New York)." It was at the corner of what is now Third Avenue and 13th Street. A stout fellow, it stood up to the young, bustling city until 1866, when it was knocked down by a horse-driven dray.

The Huguenots, who settled in New Rochelle (New York) and on the north shore of Long Island, brought with them a variety of French fruits, and the first large commercial nursery in America was established by Robert Prince, about 1730, in Flushing, Long Island. This was the very beginning of the great apple industry in the United States. Approximately a hundred years later, the Prince catalog listed such familiar varieties as Winesap. (Please turn to page 263)

CHEESE

By FRANK V. KOSIKOWSKI, Ph. D.

Cheese has been described as "milk's leap toward immortality" and the food that closely parallels wine. As Vivienne Marquis and Patricia Haskell write in The Cheese Book: "Cheese, like wine, is a preserve and bears the same relation to milk as wine bears to grapes."

What was probably true when cheese was first discovered (believed to be about 9000 B.C.) was certainly true in New York State at the beginning of the last century: The farmer's wife turned her surplus milk into cheese. "Farm" cheese, as it was then called (this was the actual inception of the American cheese industry), soon became a basic commodity for barter and sale, and Little Falls, New York, a major trade center. With the opening of the Erie Canal and the advent of the canal boats, big wheels of golden cheese, piled high on barges, were "exported" to New York City and even to England. This led, in 1851, to the establishment by a farmer, Jesse Williams, near Rome, New York, of the first Cheddar cheese factory in the U.S. A great granite monument stands today in his honor on the site of his little clapboard "Cheese House."

WINE

By WILLIAM CLIFFORD

There is an adage among wine merchants that one should buy with apples and sell with cheese. Fortunately for all of us who enjoy wine, New York State has an abundance of fine apples to eat with wine when we want to examine it critically, and excellent cheese to make it taste its best. Still more fortunately, New York produces the requisite wine. In fact, it produces a range of unique wines, which are still in a state of evolution after more than a century of serious cultivation. (The two oldest wineries, Pleasant Valley and Gold Seal, date from 1862 and 1865.) New York wines are presently in such ferment that their character may well be altered beyond recognition in another decade.

The scene of all this activity is the tranquil and breathtakingly beautiful Finger Lakes region of western New York, south of Lake Ontario, between Syracuse and Rochester. Here the gently sloping hills have many southern exposures, giving the grapes the most summer sun. The slopes become too steep even for vines, since the land falls precipitously into most of the glacially scooped-out lakes. But at Lake Keuka conditions are ideal, and it is here at Hammondsport that the (Please turn to page 262)

AMERICAN PRIMITIVES

Art fashion turns to a mirror of our past

By EPSIE KINARD

Before the coming of the camera, folk art was the only visual record of our country's history. These American primitives offer valuable visual studies, otherwise undocumented, of 18th- and 19th-century details of architecture and decorative arts and rewarding glimpses into the social history of the times. The paintings are also prized today for their simplicity and vivid colors—a fitting accent for contemporary décor.

The reproductions shown opposite are six of the 101 masterpieces of American primitive watercolors and pastels selected from the collection of Edgar William and Bernice Chrysler Garbisch. Opening October 8th at the National Gallery of Art, Washington, D.C., the exhibition moves on November 20th, or later, to major museums of American cities for a three-year tour.

This is the second of two installments chosen for exhibition from a famous collection—the first was of primitive oils—which, together with the permanent museum collections of the country, offer great numbers of Americans the opportunity to see a complete galaxy of their national heritage. (For the itinerary, incomplete at time of writing, see the listing at the end of this article. Also included are permanent museum collections of American primitive art.)

Among the portrait paintings of well-to-do families, you get intimate glimpses of Early American interiors. Grouped affably in their stylish front parlors, these pillars of society are surrounded by charming, grave-faced children, quaintly dressed, looking like miniatures of men and women and playing with pets that remind you of the fading face of the Cheshire cat.

Here you'll find the brush of the artist capturing intimate domestic scenes with an eye as all-seeing as the camera. With a passion for detail, he recorded everything he saw from the revealing image of a wall-hung painting to the tapestry-woven pattern of an ingrain carpet. Nor has he overlooked a single detail of a vertical splat back or taper-turned leg of a Sheraton chair, the ciphers of a monogram, or the coat-of-arms that decorates a fine piece of porcelain.

You will see harmonies of Early American and English-styled cabinetwork that many a decorator today would be proud to assemble. You will see the breasts of paneled chimneys painted with stylish chinoiserie; window decorations that are ancestors of our swags, lambrequins, and Palladian tiebacks; period accessories that have successfully withstood the assaults of weak reproductions.

The "traveling decorator's" taste and skill of the period survives on walls of landmark houses. The scenic murals he painted decorated rooms even more tastefully than wallpaper, which was too rare and too expensive to use.

As rewarding as these glimpses of interiors are details seen in landscape scenes of homes and well-groomed grounds. The primitives show styles of architecture ranging from Palladian-influenced Southern mansions to houses of moss-chinked, clay-caulked logs built by pioneers who were pushing the frontiers of the young republic westward.

For such cherished memorabilia, we are indebted to artists, usually amateur and anonymous: sign painters, housewives, even students at young ladies' finishing schools. They worked in oils, (Please turn to page 278)

HIGH-FASHION SLIPCOVERS

A new thought on the home-furnishings scene. No more a summertime cover-up, the slipcover now calls the turn, disregarding the season. Five rooms in two moods

By LOIS BOHLIG

The difference between a Mainbocher gingham and a kitchen apron is hardly greater than between the new slipcovers and the ones that were. The new are high fashion, T-tailored in fine fabrics, an important part of the year-round plan of a room. Yesterday's were either apologetic cover-ups for worn and soiled upholstery or put on to protect it from summer's dust and damp. No more. Thanks to the spread of air-conditioning, affluence, and appreciation of beauty in the house, there is no sloppy season.

As the look of slipcovers has changed, so, too, their role and their timing. Now they are recognized as top scene-shifters, able to alter the tone and tempo of a room, to vary its emotional climate. And they are no longer handcuffed to a single season but free to lead an any-time life. Wherever nature marks the seasons strongly, slipcovers are most often chosen to act as counterfoils. Cool colors, calm fabrics in summer; warm hues and lively patterns or rich textures in winter. Where the weather is almost continuously bland and bright, slipcovers—two sets, for choice—can simulate the play of seasons. And climate aside, change for the sake of change is valid, and slipcovers provide a sure charm against monotony. Putting them on or taking them off according to impulse is likely to be the most satisfying schedule.

If slipcovers are too similar in palette and mood to the upholstery itself, obviously they can shift the scene only to "another part of the forest," which reduces their value. Different they should be, yet not in clashing opposition, because it is often desirable to leave some pieces, side chairs, for instance, as they were, while slipcovering others. The old idea was to decide on a single swatch and order a whole set of covers, all alike, for practically everything but the piano. Now it is more usual to use two or three patterns, perhaps a floral, clustered stripes, a plaid, or a combination of patterns and plains to make a set, getting variety within the change.

Another kind of variety, in addition to color, pattern, and texture, is possible and may be used, if needed, as a corrective. Length. If too much of the furniture has fully exposed legs, some of them may well be concealed by floor-length covers. Long-skirted toppings for round tables are thoroughly familiar. Tables of other shapes can get similar treatment, as can ottomans, side chairs, benches. For simple variety where there is no centipede problem to lick, mini-skirts and ankle-length ones for some pieces.

Another area that might be claimed as slipcover country—the wall. Fabrics as permanent overlays on walls are no novelty. Think of the courtly damasks and brocades covering palatial rooms. Now there are newer versions of fabric-for-the-wall, designed to be as readily changeable, as recurrent, as important as slipcovers for furniture.

On the facing page, and the five that follow, examples of the new role of the slipcover. Many of the techniques for making slipcovers are shown in sketches on page 257.

ONE DESIGNER'S DECOR ARITHMETIC

To change the look of the living room in her New York apartment, Designer Clorinda Whitcomb counts on a few additions and subtractions. Added above, slipcovers, precisely flowered or striped, pink and white cottons for the bevy of pillows massed on the sofa. The floor is bare, and bamboo shades are the only shield against the sunlight. Taken away for the time being, the rug, the shirred-up Austrian blinds. These reappear, right, when the slipcovers are taken off. In the two views, below, of another part of the living room, you see how consistently the two plans are followed and how quickly just a few pluses and minuses can change the sum—if you are a lightning calculator.

SLIPCOVERS TO GREET OCTOBER

ALL PHOTOGRAPHS BY ERNEST SILVA

An antique needlepoint rug, formal curtains, French furniture upholstered in muted velvet, silk, fine leather. All this gives the living room in Decorator Jay Dorf's Manhattan apartment a winter-formal air. Now see the same room, above, with its "summer" slipcovers of patterned and quilted linen, tightly fitted, with the look of the finest upholstery. This was—and still could be—the May-to-October schedule. Not necessarily so. With air-conditioning, the silken elegance could well be a summer indulgence or a state to be enjoyed the year around. And with slipcovers now tailored to perfection, such a spread of autumn-leaf colors could be introduced, to applause, in October and look great all winter. No more timetables. Rooms can run on individual schedules.

LIVELY PATTERNS CALL THE TURN

Chiefly by a skillful juxtaposition of lively patterns. Decorator Fred W. Davis turned the velvety beige serenity of the room at the right into the adventure in exuberance above. Closely covered in lavishly flowered linen, the enormous unit sofa is converted into the semblance of a splendid garden corner. Rising high beside it, and related in brilliance and vigor, a series of recessed shades of linen plaid, a sort of arbor trelliswork. Part of the mood-shift: the change of shades on the walls and windows, the natural slipcover of ferns in the floating fireplace. Both versions of the model room were designed for Schumacher, whose fabrics are used throughout. All the furniture is by Dunbar. For directions on how to build-in the wall shades, please turn to page 257.

TO DEFINE THE SEASONS IF THE WEATHER DOESN'T

In an equable climate, where the seasons are so slightly differentiated that they seem to slide into each other almost imperceptibly, it takes a change in interior decoration to register a stimulating shift from summertime to winter, and vice versa. No matter how monotonous the weatherman's reports, a room's furnishings can declare a new season. Speediest of quick-change artists—slipcovers, preferably two sets of them. In summer dress, opposite page, the living room in the Beverly Hills house belonging to William Riley, who worked out its interior design plans for himself. In the slipcovers, a run of various patterns—florals, clustered stripes, a soft plaid, with a cool plain for the sofa. The same room as it is in winter, above. Warmer-toned, more formal. The matched covers on the sofa and big chair, crewel-embroidered cotton, from India. The deep-pile winter rug, from Morocco. The fine furniture and the great chinoiserie panels of painted silk remain in place. By count, the changes are few—heartening proof that a room need not be started over to achieve a distinctly different effect.

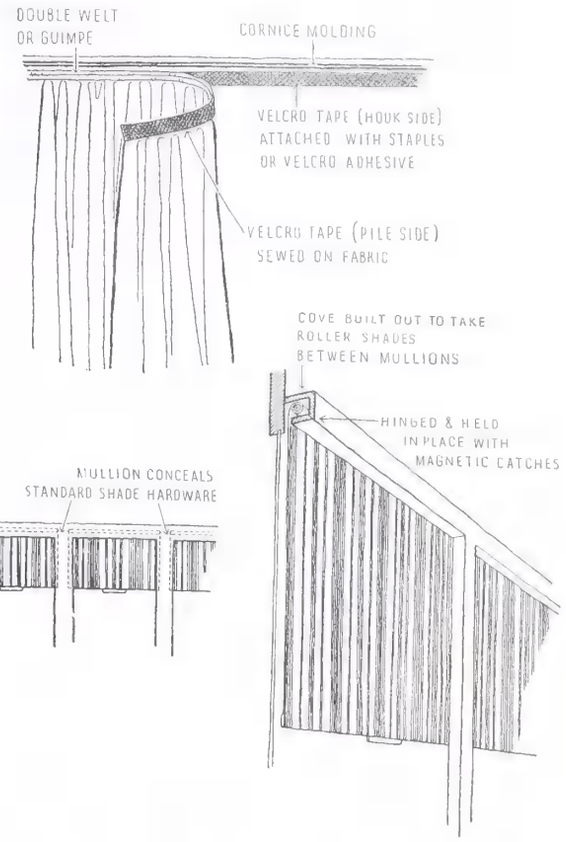
WALLS, TOO, TAKE TO SLIPCOVERS

To set a sunny mood in any season, Glenn Boyles, Instructor in Interior Design at the Fashion Institute of Technology, hangs shirred blond cotton damask over his living-room walls and repeats its yellow in the sofa covering. Contributing to the lighthearted look: the flower painting against the mirror over the sofa; porcelains in distinguished shapes and patterns posed on tables and brackets. When a soothing, cool effect is wanted instead, an alternate plan goes into operation almost as easily as flipping a switch to turn on visual air-conditioning. The pale blue walls are bared, the flower painting and bibelots replaced by others in more subdued tones. The sofa slips on a different cover, a chintz that Mr. Boyles designed in the manner of the tobacco-leaf porcelains he has collected.



Decorative (and technical) tricks used in making our High-Fashion Slipcovers

Like any craft, the making of slipcovers has its special techniques. Knowing some of the methods used by the professionals can yield better results with less effort and add the extra flair that will make good workmanship seem like artistry.

NEW YORK WINES

wine industry is centered. Besides mineral-rich glacial soil, porous enough for deep root penetration that lets vines find the water level and be independent of summer rain, a great advantage in this area is the moderating climatic influence of the lakes. The icy waters of spring help prevent too-early budding, while waters retaining the heat of summer give protection from early fall frosts.

Wine-grape cultivation in Hammondsport can be dated exactly. It began in 1829, in the rectory garden of the Episcopal church. To be sure, wild grapes were growing in New York as they were all over eastern North America—so profusely that Leif Ericson had named the country Vinland. But these were not wine grapes—at least not of the large family of grapes, the vinifera, which produces European wines. And every vinifera vine that European immigrants brought to America was destroyed by parasites or by winter cold.

Only when native American grapes were selected and hybridized did winemaking become possible in the New World. The eminent agrarian-epicure, Thomas Jefferson, nurtured the native Catawba, which later served Nicholas Longworth in his Cincinnati production. The Isabella was developed at Flushing, Long Island. Subsequently the native Concord was introduced, the Delaware emerged, and such names as Diamond and Dutchess, Salem and Ives, Niagara and Vergennes, Elvira and Diana, joined the popular Catawba and Isabella in New York. These are all natives or American hybrids, mainly of another large family of grapes, the labruscas.

The foxy grape

Labrusca grapes have a flavor all their own, which has been variously described as fruity, foxy, or grapy. It is pervasive and unmistakable, quite foreign to the European taste. Americans accept it most readily in blended wine, particularly in sparkling and sweet wines. They say in Hammondsport—and in nearby Naples, New York, where Widmer's has done the most of any winery to produce these native varietals with distinction—that anyone can come to like this characteristic grapy taste through sufficient exposure. Enthusiasts have discovered that it suits American cuisine, that it can stand up to our often sweet and heavy foods.

The current revolution at Hammondsport, which is nothing less than an effort to overthrow the labruscas, is attributable in large part to two men, Philip Wagner, a retired newspaper editor who lives in Baltimore, and Dr. Konstantin Frank, a Ukrainian-born German agricultural scientist who emigrated to America and settled in the Finger Lakes region in 1951. Mr. Wagner and Dr. Frank are offering an alternative—actually two separate alternatives—to the New York status quo.

French hybrids

For the past 20 years, Wagner has been propagating French hybrid grapes, both in his own Boordy Vineyard in Maryland, and anywhere else in the country where there was interest.

French hybrids are hardy crossbreeds that grow where the more delicate viniferas fail. The hybrids are the result of mating grape families and are designed to give acceptable wine in less than ideal conditions. Wagner estimates that hybrids now account for about two-fifths of the wine production in France. Hybrids have not yet given premium wines anywhere in the world, but since nine-tenths of the world's wine is vin ordinaire—local wine for everyday enjoyment—it is wine on this level that Wagner feels we need to cultivate in America.

Dr. Frank came to New York 15 years ago with something else in mind. He wanted to prove that he could grow the viniferas—the classic European wine grapes—in the eastern United States. And he has done it. He solved the problem of the Finger Lakes' colder climate by grafting the vinifera scions (or buds) onto hardy Canadian root stocks that force early ripening, then drain the sap deep into the ground before the hard freeze.

This year his company, Vinifera Wine Cellars, began to market a remarkable Johannisberg Riesling Spätlese that compares favorably with German Rieslings:

a Pinot Chardonnay similar to the great white Burgundies: and a Gewürztraminer reminiscent of Alsace. These wines are totally unlike anything produced in New York State before.

At Gold Seal, whose French-born president Charles Fournier supported Dr. Frank through his earlier years, vinifera grapes are being used primarily in blends, to improve the quality of several premium wines. One of them is a superb Champagne called Charles Fournier Brut, which is a blend of vinifera, labrusca, and French hybrids. Another is Fournier Nature, the same blend as the Champagne, with a trace of effervescence, but without the big Champagne fizz. From its vinifera growths, Gold Seal also makes a Riesling and a Pinot Chardonnay.

The other New York wineries have gone farther to date with French hybrids than with viniferas. Widmer produces a Seibel-Rosé; Great Western, a Vin Blanc Sec, both made from hybrids. Taylor makes a hybrid Vin Rosé, while its newly introduced Lake Country Red is a hybrid-labrusca blend. Much of Taylor's French hybrid harvest is blended in its New York State Champagnes.

Though New York produces only a small percentage of America's wine, volume is not the sole standard of judgment, and the New York winemakers have much to be proud of. If you want to see for yourself, the major wineries are all hospitable to visitors, and you'll get a glass of wine on the house. It's worth the trip just to note the contrasts. There are the traditions of the Old World (Widmer's keeps its barrels of sherry on the roof, exposed to the sun, reminiscent of a Spanish solera) and the modern assembly lines of the New (Taylor's production line especially is a wonder of mechanized efficiency). Yet even at Taylor the Champagne bottles have to be shaken and turned one by one. And the miracle of wine is still nature's own—the composition of alcohols, sugars, vitamins, minerals, and acids, merely aided but never synthesized by man. As Charles Fournier observes: "Two wines with the same chemical analysis can be so different that one is delicious and the other undrinkable." The struggle, achievement, and promise of the New York vintners to make delicious wines is a remarkable story. ■

Yellow Newtown, Rhode Island Greening, Baldwin, Pippin, and Spitzenberg. All but the last two are still grown extensively. As a matter of record, apples were selling in New York at that time for $1 to $1.50 a barrel, barrel returned, because in those days most people bought their apples by the barrel.

New York State, which ranks second in apple production (bowing only to the State of Washington), produced 23½ million bushels last year, of which half were processed (sliced, applesauce, baby food, cider, apple juice, dried, and frozen). Of the 20-odd varieties grown commercially in the United States today, six of the most popular, all-winter apples, are grown mostly in New York:

- The sweet-fleshed, red Delicious, excellent for eating raw, in the markets from September to the middle of May.
- The fragrant carmine-striped McIntosh, good for both eating and cooking, the same season as the red Delicious.
- The deep red, yellow striated Rome Beauty, crisp and slightly aromatic, one of the best for baking, in the markets from October to April.
- The rich red Cortland, with snowy-white flesh, tender and delicate, fine for eating out of hand and for all cooking purposes.
- The light yellow, sometimes greenish Baldwin, splashed with bright red, juicy to very juicy, extra-good for pies and sauces, in the markets only from October through Christmas.
- The grass-green Rhode Island Greening, an excellent "cooker" and "keeper," in the markets from October to February.

Exclusive of these, the other main varieties are:

- Summer Apples. In the markets from July 15th into September 15th. Not good "keepers," they should be used as soon after purchase as possible.
- Fall Apples. In the markets from September 15th to January. The best known of these is the Jonathan; it has been called a sprightly apple. Really an all-purpose fruit—good fresh, for desserts, pies, all cooking. Its running mate, the clear, deep yellow Grimes Golden, tender and crisp, good for cooking or for dessert.

• Winter Apples. To some extent, these cross paths with the fall apples. The marketing season is determined by the harvesting time. Golden Delicious, about as golden as an apple can be, its white flesh sometimes tinged with yellow. Rich, fresh, and so sweet you use less sugar in cooking. An excellent all-purpose apple that doesn't tend to turn brown when exposed to air. In the markets from the end of September to April, sometimes into June. The bright-yellow Newtown Pippin, its base sometimes with a pink blush, quite tart, good for eating and cooking. One of the best "keepers." In the markets toward the end of September until the last of January. (Historical note: The first known transatlantic shipment of apples was a package of Newtown Pippins sent to Benjamin Franklin in London in 1758.) The very large, smooth, glossy Northern Spy, its pale skin splashed with carmine, very juicy and spicy, excellent for eating and all cooking. In the markets from early October, sometimes well into June. The rather dull color of the Stayman is more than compensated for by its winy, rich flavor. One of the best of the all-purpose varieties. In the markets from the very first of October to the end of April. The bright, deep red Winesap, very firm, very juicy, another excellent all-purpose apple and another good "keeper": the lopsided (like the leaning Tower of Pisa) York Imperial, best for cooking because it holds its shape and flavor under heat. In the markets from October 1st to the end of March, although some years it is available until June.

Fifty years ago, apples were available only in the winter, but today, with new storing methods, specifically controlled atmosphere storage, fresh apples are increasingly available the year round. However, certain varieties do not react well to this type of storage, hence, the need to know market availability.

How to Buy Apples

Skins should be smooth and reasonably free from bruises. Too many bruises indicate decay or overripeness. Red varieties should be bright, with the ground color a greenish yellow. If predominantly green, it is an indication the apples are immature and hard. If predominantly yellow, the apples are overripe, and will be mealy, with poor flavor. Experts suggest you buy only a week's supply at one time.

How to Store Apples

If apples are firm when you buy them, they can stand at room temperature until they reach the ripeness you like; then they should be refrigerated in the hydrator or placed in a polyethylene bag in the refrigerator Whether to eat them "stone cold" or not is a matter of personal taste. In general, most fruits are at their flavorful best at room temperature.

A Few Cooking Tips

• Cook with "cooking" apples (check the list), because they hold their shape well when baked whole, sliced, or fried.

• If a recipe does not call for water in cooking apples, you must take into consideration the quality of the apples. Although they are naturally juicy, it may be necessary, if they look dry, to add a bit of water to help start the juices flowing.

• Even when a recipe calls for water, use the minimum amount —just enough to keep the apples from sticking and scorching.

• Always sweeten applesauce after it has been taken off the heat, but while it is still hot and will dissolve the sugar.

• Sprinkle raw apples with fresh lemon juice to keep them from turning dark. ■

industry is the American penchant for making Gargantuan wheels and thrusting them on long-suffering recipients, including Presidents of the United States. Just prior to his departure from the White House in 1837, Andrew Jackson (Jefferson was an earlier victim) was presented with a 1,400-pound Cheddar, made in Sandy Creek, Oswego County, New York. "Old Hickory" characteristically met the crisis head on, aging the giant Cheddar in the White House vestibule until it was ready to eat. Then he invited all—and we mean all—of Washington to share in his treat (sic). Apparently everybody turned up and, according to a newspaper report, it was a blowout in the contemporary meaning of the word: "Cheese, cheese, cheese, streams of cheese, were going up the avenue in everybody's fists; balls of cheese were in hundreds of pockets. The whole atmosphere for a half a mile around was infected with cheese."

Today, Cheddar cheese alone (variously known as "American," "store," and "factory" cheese) is made in 30 factories in the state, producing close to 40 million pounds annually. Although New York State ranks second in the manufacture of cheese nationally (Wisconsin is first), it "mothered" the industry and, specifically, three new cheeses: cream, which made its debut in Chester, New York, in 1872: Liederkranz (meaning "wreath of flowers") in Monroe in 1892; and Coon, an offspring of the Cheddar, taking its name from the man who patented the process in 1926.

Cheddar cheese originated at the end of the 16th Century in the little village of Cheddar, England, but it was not until the 19th Century that the method was standardized and a unique step in the process, "cheddaring," became part of the cheesemaker's language.

Confirmed turophiles consider the New York State June Cheddars (which sell at a premium) superior to any other domestic Cheddars. Manufactured in May and June, when the cows first go out to grass, the bouquet and unique flavor of the cheese is at its best and, like fine vintage wine, the cheese ages beautifully. Scientists attribute the flavor superiority to some component of early grass.

Outside of the Cheddars, which rank third in production, the following are all manufactured in New York State:

Creamed Cottage: This is similar to pot, Dutch (Schmierkase), and Baker's, a soft, uncured cheese made from skim milk. It is generally available in two curd sizes—large and small. Large-curd cottage cheese, sometimes called "country style" or "California style" (the package will usually say "large curd") is especially good combined with other foods; small-curd cottage cheese, frequently referred to as "old-fashioned cottage cheese," has small, firm, but tender, curds that hold their shape well. It's good in salads or any cooked dishes calling for a fine curd. It should always be refrigerated and used soon after purchase, preferably within a week.

Cream cheese: Another white, soft, uncured cheese made with whole milk, cream, and other milk products. Neufchâtel, which takes its name from the town in northern France and was first made domestically in Orange County, New York, in 1862, differs from cream cheese only in its fat content. Like cottage, both should always be refrigerated and used up within a week after purchase.

Ricotta: A soft, nutty-flavored cheese made from whole milk, used extensively in Italian cooking.

Mozzarella: Fresh, usually round or pear-shape, soft, white, with a juicy texture, made from whole milk, it is suitable for eating or cooking. Always refrigerate and use soon after purchase.

Farmers: Not unlike cottage cheese but with a somewhat higher fat content and a subtle flavor, it also differs in that the curd is pressed into a flat package so the cheese can be sliced. It calls for the same care as all uncured cheeses.

Limburger: Somewhat heavier and much stronger, but reminiscent of Liederkranz, this is not a cheese for the uninitiated. Like Liederkranz, it should be eaten at room temperature with a sturdy pumpernickel or sour rye bread, and the adventurous might try it with a slice of onion. It should be stored in the refrigerator in a tightly covered jar or container; otherwise its far-reaching bouquet might contaminate other foods.

Brick and Muenster: Two high-voltage cheeses that belong in this same group, although neither approaches the flavor heights of Liederkranz and Limburger.

Swiss: American Swiss, inspired by the famous Emmental (or Emmenthaler) of Switzerland. It is one of the cheeses "with eyes," which include Gruyère and Gouda. Pale yellow, with round or oval evenly distributed, large shiny eyes, it has a sweet, nutlike flavor and is excellent for cooking or eating. Obviously, it should be wrapped with care and stored in the refrigerator.

Cheddar: You judge a Cheddar much as you judge a wine—with your nose and your eyes. It should have a good bouquet and smooth texture—in other words, "life"—and it should have aged a minimum of five months and no longer than 14 to bring out the peak quality. Cheddars, like wine, have a tendency to overripen if not used in a reasonable length of time. "June Cheddars" are inclined to be yellower than those made at another time of year.

Fine Cheddars have a minimum of holes or "eyes"—if small, circular, and uniform, they indicate poor flavor, but if triangular in shape they mean a mechanical failure that does not affect flavor. If possible, rub a piece of the cheese between your fingers. If it is well-aged, it will be crumbly, not rubbery or pasty.

Coon cheese: With a unique flavor for which there seems to be no adequate explanation, it starts out as a Cheddar in a wheel, bandaged, and is placed in a warm, high-humidity room to form mold or a "green mat." Following this aging period, it is dipped in a paraffin bath that turns the cheese surface black under high heat. The result is an interesting, bright-yellow cheese in a very stylish black coat.

How to care for cheese

All natural cheeses should be refrigerated but brought to room temperature before using. Depending on the size, allow anywhere from 20 minutes to a couple of hours.

Ripened or cured cheeses keep well refrigerated, if properly protected, preferably with the original wrapping. Lacking that, Saran, foil, or polyethylene bags (all air squeezed out) are very satisfactory.

Soft, unripened cheeses, such as cottage, cream, and Neufchâtel are quite perishable and should be used within a few days—a week at the most—after purchase.

If mould develops, simply scrape it off or cut it off the surface. In the event it penetrates the cheese deeply (and you shouldn't allow this to happen), you may have to discard the cheese.

Odds and ends of cured cheeses that have dried out can be grated, placed in a covered jar, and refrigerated to use in recipes calling for grated cheese.

Strong cheeses, such as Limburger, must be stored in a tightly covered jar or container. Since they are inclined to ripen fast, it is best to use them in a reasonable time.

Freezing cheeses is not generally recommended. If necessary, freeze no more than a pound in a package, securely protected by a moisture-proof wrap. Store in freezer at zero temperature. The cheeses that freeze best are Brick, Cheddar, Swiss, Mozzarella. Thaw in the refrigerator and use immediately after thawing. ■

APPLE AND CHEESE RECIPES FROM NEW YORK'S TRIPLE HARVEST

Liederkranz Spread

Combine in these proportions 1 package (4-ounce size) Liederkranz cheese with 2 tablespoons softened butter and a few drops of Tabasco. Work together until you have a smooth paste. Add some finely chopped chives and freshly ground pepper to taste. Spread on thin, bite-size slices of rye or pumpernickel bread. Delicious.

Cheese Puffins

Egg whites, well beaten
Salt
Pepper
Nutmeg
Grated Swiss cheese
Dry bread crumbs
Vegetable oil for deep-fat frying
Parsley

Allow 1 well-beaten egg white per person, seasoned with salt, freshly ground white pepper, nutmeg, mixed with 3 tablespoons grated cheese.

Make little balls of the cheese mixture with a spoon, then roll in the bread crumbs. Drop into the oil, heated to 320° F. on the thermometer. As soon as they are golden on one side, turn with a slotted spoon, and brown second side lightly. As they cook, drain on paper toweling and keep hot.

Make little bouquets of a good bunch of parsley and fry in the hot fat. Drain on paper towels.

Pile the cheese balls in a mound in a hot serving dish and garnish with the fried parsley. Serve at once.

Red Cabbage, Steeplechase Style

1 medium red cabbage
3 apples
3 tablespoons butter
2 teaspoons flour
⅓ cup vinegar
½ cup brown sugar, firmly packed
1 teaspoon salt
Dash freshly ground pepper
⅓ cup red wine

Shred the cabbage fine, place in a saucepan, add a little boiling water, and cook about 10 minutes or until cabbage is tender but still somewhat crisp to the tongue. Drain thoroughly and set aside.

Pare and core the apples, cut in thin slices, cover with water, and cook for several minutes or until tender. Drain well.

Melt the butter in a large skillet, add cabbage and apples, and cook together for several minutes over a moderate heat. Stir in flour thoroughly, then add all remaining ingredients. Cook over a low heat for 10 minutes, giving mixture an occasional stir. Serves 6.

Excellent with roast pork, duck, or goose.

Eggplant Manicotti

1 pound ricotta cheese
½ a 5-ounce wedge Romano cheese, grated
2 eggs, slightly beaten
Salt
Freshly ground white pepper
1 medium eggplant
Vegetable oil
Tomato sauce

Mix the two cheeses together, beat in the eggs with a wooden spatula, add salt and pepper to taste. Peel the eggplant and slice very thin. Then fry, a few slices at a time, in a small amount of hot vegetable oil, until golden on both sides.

Spread 1½ to 2 tablespoons of the cheese mixture on each slice of fried eggplant and roll up.

Spread a thick layer of tomato sauce over the bottom of a shallow, ovenproof baking dish that can go to the table. Arrange the eggplant rolls close together on top of the sauce.

Place in a preheated 400° F. oven for 15 minutes or until piping hot through and bubbling. Serves 4, but recipe can be doubled successfully.

Serve with a green salad dressed with Vinaigrette and crisp French bread.

A Brace of Pheasants with Apple Slices in Butter

Salt
Freshly ground pepper
Stuffing:
Pheasant livers
1 large apple, cored, unpeeled
1 package (3-ounce size) cream cheese
2 tablespoons heavy cream
2 tablespoons applejack or brandy
1 tablespoon rosemary, crushed
6 strips larding pork
8 tablespoons (½ stick) butter
⅔ cup port
1 can (10½-ounce size) beef broth

Rub a little salt and pepper into the skin of each pheasant. Chop the livers and apple very fine. Work the cream cheese until soft, then work in the cream. Mix with the liver-apple mixture, applejack, rosemary, salt and pepper to taste. Stuff each of the birds, then truss securely. Lay three pieces of larding pork, overlapping slightly, lengthwise on each pheasant, to cover the breasts and legs. Tie securely in three places with light, white string.

Place the birds in a roasting pan large enough to hold them without crowding. Add the butter and the port. Roast in a preheated 425° F. oven for 45 minutes or until legs are soft when pressed.

Remove the cooked pheasants from the pan, discard larding pork and all string. Place on a warm serving platter and keep warm.

Skim any fat off the roasting pan, add the beef broth, and bring to a boil. Boil, stirring in any brown particles that cling to the pan, until you have a rich sauce. Spoon some of the sauce over each pheasant. Pour remainder into a warm sauce bowl.

Serve with hot Apple Slices in Butter. Two pheasants will serve 6 to 7 well.

The people who built your dishwasher * recommend that you use something besides a detergent to prevent water spots.

They recommend:

LIQUID JET-DRY®

for dishwashers with automatic dispensers for JET-DRY

LIQUID JET-DRY causes glasses, silverware and china to shed water instantly after they are rinsed. No water drops are left on the dishes to dry into unsightly water spots. Dishwasher manufacturers, recognizing JET-DRY as the answer to water spotting, equip many models to inject LIQUID JET-DRY into the rinse water. If your dishwasher is so equipped, don't run out of JET-DRY. Even one dishwashing without JET-DRY can cause spots.

SOLID JET-DRY®

for dishwashers without dispensers for JET-DRY

SOLID JET DRY is now available for dishwashers not equipped to dispense LIQUID JET-DRY. It dries dishes just as spot-free and sparkling (and just as automatically) as LIQUID JET-DRY does in dishwashers equipped with automatic dispensers. SOLID JET-DRY comes in the form of a bar which is neatly encased in a plastic basket. You simply clip the basket to any corner of the upper rack of your dishwasher. Remember to buy JET-DRY. At grocery stores and dishwasher dealers.

Anne Seranne's Cheese Soup

Author of The Complete Book of Home Freezing and other excellent cookbooks, Miss Seranne edited the forthcoming America Cooks, a comprehensive cookbook by the General Federation of Women's Clubs.

2 cups milk
1½ cups chicken broth (your own or canned)
1 clove garlic, split
2 tablespoons butter
2 tablespoons flour
Freshly ground white pepper
⅛ teaspoon freshly ground nutmeg
½ pound sharp Cheddar cheese, cubed
½ cup white wine
2 egg yolks
½ cup heavy cream
Grated Parmesan cheese

Combine the milk, chicken broth, and garlic in a heavy saucepan. Bring to a boil slowly. Discard the garlic and set aside.

Melt the butter in the top of a double boiler. Stir in flour, several twists of the pepper mill, and the nutmeg until smooth. Add the hot milk mixture and cook over a moderate heat beating steadily with a wire whip until smooth and slightly thickened. Add the cheese and cook, stirring until it has melted. Stir in the wine, place over simmering water, and cook about 20 minutes, giving the mixture an occasional stir.

Just before serving, beat the egg yolks and cream together with a whip. Beat in a little of the hot mixture, then combine the two slowly, whipping constantly.

Serve piping hot with freshly grated Parmesan on the side. Serves 6.

Apple Slices Baked in Butter

4 to 5 all-purpose apples
Salt
Sugar
Juice 1 lemon
Butter

Pare, core, and slice the apples very thin. Arrange in neat rows, overlapping slightly, in a flat baking dish that can go to the table.

Sprinkle lightly with salt, fairly generously with sugar, add the lemon juice, and pour melted butter (about half a stick) over all.

Place in a preheated 300° F. oven and bake, basting occasionally, for about 25 minutes or until apple slices are tender. This can be done ahead of time. Just before serving, sprinkle with a little more granulated sugar, dot all over with butter, and slide under the broiler until the edges of the apples turn golden.

Serve immediately with pork, goose, duck, or game. In fact, any time you'd usually serve applesauce.

Fabulous Cottage Cheese Cake

1 6-ounce package zwieback
½ cup confectioners' sugar
¼ pound (1 stick) butter, melted
1 pound cottage cheese
4 eggs, separated
1 cup granulated sugar
¼ teaspoon salt
Grated rind 1 large lemon
Juice 1 large lemon
½ teaspoon vanilla
1 cup heavy cream
¼ cup sifted all-purpose flour

Grease an 8-inch spring-form pan heavily. Set aside. Roll the zwieback into very fine crumbs. Coat the sides of the pan with the crumbs. Combine remaining crumbs with confectioners' sugar and melted butter. Press half on the bottom of the pan. Save remainder for the top of cake.

Force the cottage cheese through a fine sieve (to break it up) into a very large bowl; beat egg yolks until thick and creamy, then gradually beat in ½ cup of the granulated sugar. Mix thoroughly with the cottage cheese, salt, lemon rind, lemon juice, vanilla, heavy cream, and flour.

Beat egg whites until they stand in peaks when you hold up the beater, then gradually beat in remaining granulated sugar. Beat about a third into the cheese mixture with a wire whip. Fold in remainder carefully with a spatula.

Pour into the prepared pan and cover top with remaining crumb mixture. Place in a preheated 250° F. oven and bake for 1¾ hours.

Leave in the oven with the heat off, door closed, until cake is cold. This is a matter of several hours, but it helps to prevent the cheesecake from falling.

Apple Pie with Cheddar Pastry

Pastry:

⅔ cups sifted all-purpose flour
¼ teaspoon salt
¼ pound Cheddar cheese, grated
½ cup vegetable shortening
¼ cup ice water

Sift the flour and salt together, then work in the cheese with a fork until it is evenly distributed. With a pastry blender or two knives, work in the shortening until the mixture looks mealy. Dribble in the water, stirring lightly, until pastry holds together.

Divide in half. Roll one half on lightly floured board, and line a 9-inch pie pan. Save remaining pastry for top crust. Refrigerate both while you prepare the filling.

Filling:

6 large cooking apples
½ cup sugar
¼ teaspoon salt
Grated rind ½ lemon
Juice ½ lemon
2 tablespoon butter

Peel, core, and slice apples thin; mix sugar, salt, and lemon rind together.

Layer the apple slices in the unbaked pie shell, sprinkling some of the sugar mixture between the layers. When all are in, sprinkle lemon juice over the top and dot with bits of butter.

Roll remaining pastry on a lightly floured board. Cover the pie, slash in several places to allow steam to escape; seal edges, and crimp.

Bake 10 minutes in a preheated 400° F. oven. Reduce heat to 350° F., and continue baking 45 minutes longer.

Serve warm or at room temperature, never chilled.

Apple Crullers

1 cup all-purpose flour
¼ teaspoon salt
Pinch baking soda
2 tablespoons sugar
¼ cup apple juice
½ cup butter
4 eggs
Sugar Frosting

Sift the flour, salt, soda, and sugar together; combine the apple juice and butter in a saucepan, and bring up to a boil over moderate heat; stir the flour mixture into the hot juice.

Cook over a medium heat, stirring constantly, until the batter is very thick, leaves the sides of the pan, and forms a ball. Take off the heat. Beat in the eggs, one at a time, vigorously with a wooden spatula. Set aside to cool.

Using a pastry bag and large tube, make twists of the batter (like a snail). Drop into hot fat (375° F. on the thermometer) and fry until golden brown. Drain on paper towels. While still hot, glaze with a thin coating of Sugar Frosting.

Sugar Frosting: Mix ¾ cup sifted confectioners' sugar, ½ teaspoon vanilla, 3 to 4 teaspoons water until smooth. If not liquid enough, add a few more drops of water.

Apple Nut Tea Bread

2 large oranges
1 cup seedless raisins
2 cups or 1 can (16-ounce size) applesauce
4 cups sifted all-purpose flour
4 teaspoons baking powder
2 teaspoons baking soda
2 cups sugar
1½ teaspoons salt
1½ cups coarsely chopped walnuts
2 eggs, well beaten
6 tablespoons (¾ stick) butter, melted

Squeeze oranges: put rind of oranges and raisins through a food chopper, using a medium blade. Combine orange juice, rind, and raisins with applesauce.

Sift flour, baking powder, soda, sugar, and salt together into a large bowl. Mix the applesauce mixture and the nuts in thoroughly. Stir in the eggs and melted butter until well blended.

Pour into two greased loaf (9-by-5-by-3-inch) pans. Bake in a preheated 350° F. oven 1 hour and 15 minutes.

Turn out of pans and cool on a wire rack. Allow to stand about 12 hours before slicing.

Apple Slices in Custard

Drain the syrup off the canned apple slices, arrange in a pretty bowl, cover with Almond Custard, and sprinkle with toasted slivered almonds.

2 eggs, beaten lightly

Bread-and-Butter Apples

Cut the bread into smallish dice, place in a preheated oven until golden brown all over. Set aside.

Heat a good knob of butter in heavy frypan, add the apples, and cook over a fair heat, stirring constantly, until they turn a sticky, golden brown. Turn out into a serving dish.

interest in photography, which has led him to document most of his design projects in short films. Crammed with good ideas, sprightly with color, and always leading to logical conclusions, these too have won critics' kudos. One of his most charming films is about the much written-up house he and his wife built. Perched in the shelter of a Pacific Palisades canyon wall, it faces the ocean and is a triumph of design. It was built using only standard factory-produced components, all of which could be ordered from a catalog. It is redeemed from austerity by splashes of bold color, a delightful hodgepodge of constantly changing artifacts united by excellence of design. The Eameses, who work together with rare rapport and share credit equally for everything, find their handsome house a practical and attractive place to live. Others find it a "statement" as well. If they ever build a new house, it will be different only because they are experimenting again, not because they are unhappy with this one. As anyone feels who is pleased with her house, Ray Eames remarked, "Every day we still find something new we like about the house."

They doubt they will ever build again. "I'd be hobbling around it on a cane," said the 59-year-old Eames. However, he is excited about the "current progress of architecture, if not about architects. No matter what the architects are doing, architecture itself is moving toward the development of systems instead of personality. The remarkable thing is that these systems have the possibility of providing more genuine human considerations than the highly personalized architect. The growing kit of modern problem structuring tools—such as operation research, computer programming concepts—are far from being a threat to human values; they are doing much to show us where the values lie. As for the future of furniture, it is a kind of architecture in miniature at the human scale and if we ever solve our architecture we may even solve our furniture." ■ particularly for its subtleness say there is always something unexpected in each of his designs.

Slowly, without ever pushing or being pushed, Paul Tuttle has won international attention for the blend of delicacy and strength that marks his work. He now spends part of each year, usually the summer, in Switzerland, where his designs are manufactured by several small custom firms.

"Over here, I work with independent cabinetmakers to fill custom orders, but it is a slow and unnecessarily expensive process" Tuttle says with a wistful shrug.

You have the feeling he would like to be able to give his furniture to anyone who loved it. Hardly the high road to commercial success, particularly since it is so easy to love.—D.W.

c or glass generally used to ouse a lamp, Mr. Nelson prayed a wire cage with plastic, n important step in freeing mp design from its rigid past.

"Wood is out except for decoation or as a production conve-ience," he has said on several ccasions. "As a decorative ac-ent in quality carpentry, wood good, but it doesn't lend itself modern, mass-production techiques." Today, Mr. Nelson beeves that all materials in their lace can serve good modern de-gn, but they must be compati-le with function.

Through his new uses of new naterials, he has created a flow f space and a unity that he conders basic to modern living.
n his Catenary Group for Her-an Miller in 1963, he applied ie theory of aircraft construcon to create comfort through a nique frame based on a down-ard curve. Chrome-polished

Willing to discuss design in ny area in great detail, Mr. Nel-on is an articulate but softly outspoken critic of today's creativity. As one who has frequently seen resistance turn into enthusiasm, Mr. Nelson holds a strong point of view on all design whether or not he is an active participant. His criticism underscores at every point his attitude against emulating the past in creating products for modern living. Adam and Chippendale furnishings were radical departures for their time, but Mr. Nelson believes they are incompatible with today's living.

Period cabinets for television and radio sets, particularly, have received harsh criticism from Mr. Nelson. Such apparatus should be housed to suggest what it actually is—a piece of electronic equipment. Even bad modern cases, he is convinced, are better than period design. "It is a contradiction between assumed period and purpose." Portable television sets housed in plastic cases are far better than the larger units that are embellished to conform to today's nostalgic mood.

Mr. Nelson's most recent collection, the Action Office Group for Herman Miller, will undoubtedly have an impact on residential furnishings. Based on the theory that activities within an office are not static, the group features pieces created for movement, an outlook that could well apply to home furnishings. Modestly, Mr. Nelson says: "If it sells, it will have an influence. It was developed as a tool." Vacation living, too, will soon reflect the Nelson viewpoint of simplicity and space orientation. His current project, a radical approach to vacation home construction, will be introduced next year. ■ to interrupt a conversation. All wonderfully practical, comfortable things, planned to work.

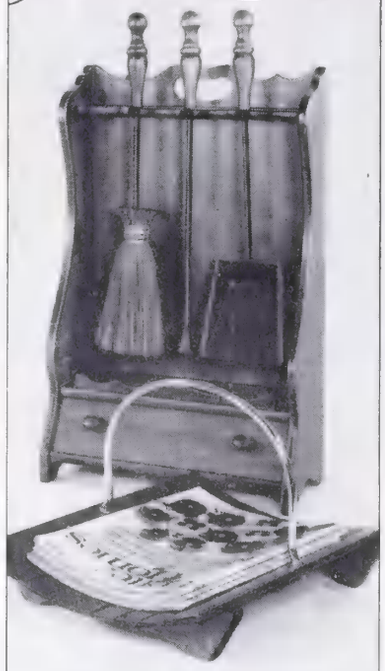
Wormley is an avid collector who lives amid a controlled confusion of cloisonné, pre-Columbian art, an occasional antique, early Greek statuary, modern paintings, American crafts, and any other piece of art that catches his eclectic eye. "The collectors' cabinets I've designed for Dunbar are mainly the result of trying to organize my own packrat-like propensities," he confides. A gentle and kindly man with an ascerbic, flashing wit, he is often outspokenly critical of what he considers wrong with the furniture business. "If manufacturers try to create constantly changing fashions in furniture, they'll descend to the level of moviemakers."

He is sensitive and knowledgeable about art of all periods, yet decries ivory-tower thinking and delights in the market place. He brings these same seemingly disparate elements to his furniture. It has been aptly called "Elegant Contemporary" in an attempt to describe its vigorous modernism softened by subtle reminders that nostalgia, intimacy, warmth, and detail are lasting, comfortable, and good to live with.

Comfortable furniture can be one of the quiet joys of life, and well-bred quietness is one of the few clues to discerning the Wormley touch. Unlike many of his colleagues, there is little of the bravura in his personal style. His work always carries the feeling that it is furniture first and self-expression later. If Wormley's pieces seem familiar, it is only because they have been copied so often and at so many price levels.

In spite of his personal and artistic reticence, he is widely known as a master designer in both Europe and America. One of the reasons may be that while he is designing strictly contemporary furniture, he approaches his subject in an 18th-century manner. Wood is his basic material, and he carves and joins it with a craftsman's touch.



When Edward Wormley began his designing career in 1931, America was just emerging from the vulgar twenties, and the public had a choice between bad traditional, good traditional, and Paris Moderne—all the chrome-etched glass and V's of crotch veneers. The 12-year-old firm of Dunbar had a reputation for outstanding craftsmanship: drawers slid out easily, pulls stayed on, all lines were perfectly plumb, and every edge was sanded silky—but their product was soberly conventional. The staid Midwestern firm and its new young designer joined forces and plunged bravely into creating furniture for the 20th Century.

The only thing they carried over was an insistence that the furniture be beautifully made, and it is. To this pride of workmanship, Wormley added his keen awareness of the visual and tactile pleasure of wood. As a result, his good-to-live-with furniture often shimmers with richness because of his artful juxtapositions of materials. Brass glints against dull, oiled surfaces. He has balanced marble, mosaic, or Tiffany tiles against the luxurious graining of exotic woods in perfect proportions. So quality of surfaces as well as quality of design and of precise workmanship total up to another comfort: the confidence in long-lasting performance (and therefore in money well spent).

Perhaps most important of all, it is a comfortable pleasure to look upon and live with the self-effacing loveliness of Wormley designs. Some furniture, albeit handsome, is too strong to blend with its companion pieces. It stands there, proud, strident, and ultimately ugly.

"I don't believe good furniture is ever aggressive," says Wormley, "or, to put it more positively, I think it should have a decent anonymity. Some of these sculpturally commanding forms are abstractly exciting but are almost always the prima donnas in a room. They overshadow and compete with everything else. You can't and shouldn't rely on furniture to create a truly individualistic room. It should be there merely as the background for your personal possessions and collections. Let's face it," he says, softening his stern words with a genial smile, "there should be much more important art in a home than what you sit on!"—D.W.

of Korbous, a seaside spa that was patronized by the Romans in the First Century B.C. and is still a going concern, offering cold springs, hot springs, waters to drink and waters to bathe in.

And if you are a sportive romantic, the interesting divertisement of this Cape Bon region is the ancient art of hawking. Travelers are invited to participate.

Everywhere in jasmine-scented Tunisia, you will find occasion to reproach yourself for not having done your homework in ancient history and classical mythology. Tunis, the capital city, where you are most likely to arrive by plane, is a stone's throw—as such things go—from Carthage, which is still here for you to visit, a magnificent pillared Roman ruin silhouetted against sea and sky, surrounded by early Carthaginian and late Christian ruins as well.

According to legend, Carthage was originally founded in the Ninth Century B.C. by the beautiful and formidable Princess Dido, a refugee from Phoenicia, much enamored of Aeneas, and you'd know about her, they tell us, had you studied your Vergil. The Carthaginians at one time controlled all of North Africa, many of the Mediterranean islands, and Spain, which was finally won from them by the Romans after 80 years of the Punic Wars (Punic was the Latin word for Phoenician). Ancient Carthaginian warriors most of us have heard of are Hamilcar Barca and Hannibal, who is remembered for crossing the Alps by elephant. The conquering Romans settled it in 146 B.C. and led an urbane, prosperous existence here, a matter of patrician villas, art collections, and all manner of luxury. (Wines from these parts are beautiful to this day.) Evidence of all this is continually being dug up all over the Tunisian coast, and there are museums of local finds in Carthage, Sfax, El-Djem, and Susa.

The most impressive museum of all, and easily among the most beautiful of museums anywhere, is the Bardo on the outskirts of Tunis. Here have been reassembled great halls of mosaics once the adornment of Roman mansions. This astonishing artistry covers walls, floors, and ceilings with pictorial fables and reportage of the times—a room, for instance, depicting the goings-on at an early circus. There are portraits in mosaic, executed with tesserae fine as seeds so that pictures look as if they had been stitched in needlepoint. Quite unlike the Byzantine and Norman mosaic work we're usually used to seeing, this is fluid and gracefully drawn. Fragments of the ancient stuff are prevalent enough that you can purchase pieces of it in the museum, and lovely souvenirs they make. The whole museum experience also might set you wondering why the current amateur mosaic-workers concentrate only on table tops.

Another part of the museum is devoted to the fascinating salvage from an ancient sunken cargo trireme, bringing to Carthage such luxuries as couches ordered up, one assumes, to furnish the dining hall of a colonial Roman tycoon.

The museum building itself was formerly the palace of the last Turkish bey and so, skipping over the centuries and intermittent struggles of Roman, Berber, Crusader, Spaniard, and Arab, you can see reproduced here the sybaritic background in which the last century ruler lived—in a Haroun-al-Raschid style.

The National Assembly meets in one part of the same building, its impressive entry staircase magnificently guarded by stern, unsmiling, and very Desert Song swordsmen, turbaned, booted in flowing white cloaks. Presently Tunisia is a republic, having passed from the protectorate of France in 1956. Its current president, the energetic, western-oriented Habib Bourguiba, has built his very French-accented palace in Saïda overlooking the ruins of Carthage. You may catch a glimpse of it on the way to the blue-and-white Arab town of Sidi Bou Saïd. From the air, like most Tunisian towns, Sidi must certainly look like a great spill of bright, white sugar cubes on a tawny landscape-color cloth. White walls line its climbing cobbled streets. Doors (of the blue the Arabs consider a fortunate color) open into inner courtyards, fragrant with jasmine and cup-of-gold. At the top of the town, overlooking on a sunny noonday the dazzle of descending sugar cubes and the blue sea, there is the little Sidi-Bou-Saïd restaurant and hotel, with romantic hanging gardens, and very practical Swiss management. Near the shore of the town stands the high-rise, resort-minded, modern Amilcar Hotel, with a skylighted dining room and dance floor where the performances shift from veiled and ancient folk dances of the tinkling cymbal and mysterious East variety to the Monkey as enacted by the younger clientêle.

Returning to Tunis from Saida, you need not feel that the evening's entertainment is done. There is now, for those as like it, a discothèque. The Bey's Palladium, so called because it was formerly the home of a local bigwig, and as swinging as any scene is likely to get.

Tunisians are a good-looking people related to many ethnic groups. The country is Islamic but speaks French as well as its vernacular Arabic. The city of Tunis is no exception to the traveler's frequent observation that wherever the French have been they have left behind a certain visible elegance, as if they had brought Paris with them in a locket—in smaller versions of 19th-century stone hôtels with window doors and iron-grilled, purely-for-ornament balconies; in tree-lined boulevards, in leafy drives that were surely intended for smart ladies in well turned out equipages instead of the tiny red-and-white low-tariff taxis that are as much used here as buses elsewhere in the world. Yet, when you emerge from a morning's shopping through the dusky warrens of the Tunis souks, or bazaars, the trimly clipped plane trees in the dazzling Place du Gouvernement, have a look of the Orient that you usually see transplanted in the little towns of Provençale France.

The Medina, the medieval core of the Old Islamic city, is where the native shopkeepers and craftsmen hold forth and offer the most colorful sight-seeing in town as well as a plethora of varied wares. Following the typical pattern of an Arab town, the souks spread out from the 9th-century Great Mosque in an interlocking web of dimly lighted, sometimes arcaded alleys, lined with open booths and their bargaining proprietors. Each of these streets has its specialty. You will find jewelry in the Souk Des Orfèvres (note the marvelously intricate gold and silver in large-scale filigree and enamel, wrought in the taste of the Berber ladies who carry their treasures on them as ornaments); the Souk of the Ladies, which specializes in such cosmetics as the henna with which Tunisians almost invariably tint their hair, and shampoo soap, displayed in baskets like lumps of glossy brown coal: The Brides' Street, where wedding finery, lavishly encrusted in glittering embroidery, is displayed along with round baskets, pouffed and padded in blue satin, ready to receive the wedding gifts; the Copper Market is especially noteworthy for those interested in great trays washed with tin, and oriental ewers and basins which have countless decorative uses when you get them home: the Street of the Shoemakers, known to send tourists staggering back to their hotel rooms loaded down with inexpensive, well made, enticingly Oriental slippers for everyone on the list from grandfathers to infant babies; the cloth street, where you might look for the embroidered challis that is typically Tunisian, often charmingly made into baby buntings.

Ironwork and wirework, as in lacy white birdcages, are particularly well crafted in Tunisia. So are the famous knot-stitched rugs, in simple patterns (a plain 8′ by 10′ can cost as little as $129, you pay the overweight), or in the complex patterns of Kairouan, called Mergoums, Klims, and Zerbiyas, once demanded as yearly tribute by the Caliphs of Bagdad, who were pretty good connoisseurs of carpets themselves. (Kairouan, incidentally is a holy town, famous for its mosques and early architectural beauty as well as for weaving, and is becoming popular on the tourist route, so you might save your rug-shopping for here.) Qaiwan and Djerba, an island that is a well-equipped bathing resort, also have a tradition of rug weaving. The Souk el-Leffa is a showplace for those rugs in Tunis. Leather goods, stitched and tooled in hassocks, wallets, albums, and souvenir trinkets are good buys, and in the Saddler's Market, even if you will never be the owner of an Arab charger, you will enjoy the lavish sight of harness and trappings embellished with gold and silver.

made and so comfortable to wear, it is a temptation for Westerners of both sexes to order up a jebba, the commonly worn man's robe of white cotton, usually bordered in embroidery. The handsome fermela, a deep-cut vest ornamented with elaborate braid and tiny buttons is another favorite souvenir. The typically round —as opposed to fez shape— chechia of garnet-red wool felt suggests itself not as masquerade material when you get it home, but as a firm foundation for a lady's hat.

Auction fanciers who are also jewelry lovers (and preferably accompanied by an Arabic-speaking friend) may pick up bargains at the daily auctions of modern jewelry held at 10 each morning except Friday in the Souk-el Berka, which was once the site of the slave market. Whether you're bidding or not, the performance is worth watching.

The souks, as you can gather, rate a good slice of your time. They're open for business from 8:30 A.M. to 7:00 P.M., but don't schedule a visit for Friday afternoon, which is the Muslim Sabbath.

All is not lost, however, if you can't souk-shop. The Artisanat Tunisien, the government craft organization, has a display room and sales center in Tunis at Avenue Habib Bourguiba and the Avenue de Carthage, where you can see a sampling of the country's typical wares. The unit of currency in Tunisia is the dinar, worth about $1.92.

THOSE inveterate shopping travelers who "collect" the Flea Markets of the world the way others do stamps will discover their Tunisian happy hunting ground at the entrancingly named Port de Miel or Honey Gate. There is indeed a gate here, set in a fortress-like wall, one of many gates in the old part of Tunis that are architectural sights in themselves and are reminders of the city's history of alarums, excursions, sieges, panoply, captains, and kings. Embracing two harborlike lakes, Tunis is as much affected by the strategic importance of these waters as by the beautiful vistas they create. Tunis was an important port in World War II, just as it was to the knights of Louis XII of France who died near Carthage in 1270 in the midst of a crusade against "The Paynim."

Today Tunis is a curious straddling of East and West, past and present—with the future vitally involved, for the government is trying to accelerate the country's coming of age with long range plans that depend upon technical help from the U.S. and the European countries like Belgium and France. There are rumors of oil under those golden sands, which seem mysteriously to move from sea to oasis and finally merge into the vast desert. This is truly an exotic land where many, many sloe-eyed ladies still veil their faces in the public streets (a custom that is of course passing), or from their homes, seeing, but unseen, look down upon the passing parade through the lattice of the traditional Meshrabiya or observation balcony (an architectural device, by the way, the Spaniards borrowed from the Moors). To sweeten the business colloquy in this jasmine-rich land, men in jebbas and chechias may sniff a small, intricately woven bouquet of jasmine blossoms. And yet this is the land where billboards shout at the motorist "Mettez un tigre dans votre moteur." The Tunis Hilton, in an out of town park, the Belvedere, overlooking vast views of the city, is just over a year old and seems already to be an international conference hall. It is, of course, jazzed-up, i.e., Hiltonian. Tunisian, with plenty of locally made iron work, brass, carpeting, carved grilles, and costumed personnel (in what one imagines to be drip-dry manifestations of traditional garb. But whether they come in Homburgs or egals, the users of its coffee shop, air conditioning, inner-spring mattresses, indoor swimming pool, glittering plumbing, and functioning telephones, seem to think this symbol of the Modern World is just fine.

FOR the inquisitive traveler, it is this kind of mix that makes Tunis so delicious, and it's made even more so by virtue of its closeness to wherever you are likely to be in Europe. For example, this atmosphere of Beau Geste and attar of roses is two and three quarters hours away from Brussels by the nonstop Caravelle of Sabena Airlines, a service we experienced on its inaugural flight last November. Thus you can be eating waterzoui one meal and cous-cous the next—both on their native hearths. We have always found Sabena in-flight food to be excellent, although when we once mentioned this to a Belgian lady she replied crisply that it is service, not food that distinguishes Sabena, meaning, "There's no reason to praise the food, why shouldn't it be good?"

INGE MORATH-MAGNUM

Almost all major European airlines come into the Tunis-Carthage Airport, which is growing as a transfer point for all parts of Africa. This proximity and easy transportation has induced many Europeans and a surprisingly large number of Americans to emulate the Roman patricians who maintained winter villas in the Tunisian sunshine. Mediterranean cruise ships stop here, and French, Italian, and Tunisian passenger steamers regularly connect Tunis, Marseilles, Naples, and Palermo.

This is a country noted for such exotics as pomegranates, dates, and honey. There is a brandy made of figs called boukha. Most flavoring leans towards mint leaves, coriander, and cumin. Harissa, the national condiment, highly spiced, shows up on every table, but by and large the cuisine has a refinement we have not found in Levantine countries of Muslim culture. Cous-cous, the national dish, is fine semolina, cooked to absorb the juices of spiced lamb in a surprisingly moist but seemingly dry way. And surely their mechouia salad of tuna, tomatoes, peppers, capers, and black olives is the gastronomic mamma of the French Riviera's salade niçoise. Tunisian desserts, on the other hand, inherit the lavishness of the Turks' honey-soaked baklava and the delicacy of French mille-feuilles. The fine Tunisian hand for puff paste is especially evident in their hors d'oeuvre surprise, the brik, a delicious wrapping of egg in crisp tender pastry. All sorts of foods are similarly wrapped, presenting a series of miraculous strudels. Non-national food tends to be French, so the traveler has a lot to say baracalovic or thank you for.

A U.S. citizen may stay for four months in Tunisia on his passport alone, without a visa. Smallpox vaccination is needed: cholera, yellow fever, typhoid, and typhus shots are recommended. The Tunisian Government Travel Ministry has prepared excellent literature for prospective voyagers, which you should read before talking to your travel agent. For this and general information: Tunisian Trade & Tourist Office, 65 East 56th Street, New York 10022. ■ watercolors, and pastels. They painted portraits, landscapes, harbor and marine views, and historical scenes. They painted family mortuary pieces, illustrations of Biblical texts, and pictorial scroll-lettered records of family documents called "fractur." Such artists painted on anything they could get: old mattress ticking, window shades, pine boards, slabs of tin or zinc, fabric, and paper. If paper were in short supply, the artist pieced odds and ends together and didn't mind if the piecing showed.

In this beginning of our national art, there were enormous numbers of paintings. Many were in watercolors and pastels and painted by women who could easily transfer skills in embroidering and weaving to delicate watercolor and crayon painting.

The larger number of portraits was turned out by limners (from the word "to illumine"). By trade, these painters of signs, ships, carriages, and houses roamed during the springtime through the countryside. Like peddlers, they carried their brushes and paints on their backs and searched hopefully for subjects who would pay from $3 to $40 a head for adults' portraits and 20 cents to $1 for children's, bed and board thrown in.

Counterfeit finery

Many came to prospective patrons bringing canvases with stock figures already painted, except for faces. The limner could add a face, painted on the spot, and from a large assortment of headless figures his patron could have his pick of counterfeit finery, backgrounds, and poses. He could have props painted into his portrait to indicate his vocation.

As a result, we see many primitive portraits with men, women, and children dressed in identical clothes and surrounded by the same accessories. In borrowed finery, the most modest farmer could sit for his portrait in a Sunday-go-to-meeting black broadcloth, a ruffled white shirt, an aristocratic stock tied around his neck. His wife could be stylishly dressed in an elegant black silk, an embroidered shawl, and a pretty, beribboned cap tied under her chin. Earlier, the clothes might be copied from English portraits the artist had seen of stylish duchesses; later in the period, from the last word in fashions from Godey's Lady's Book. But when the limner sat down to add a face to the headless figure, he painted what he saw of human nature with the stern realism of an unyielding Puritan. He painted a grim, hard-set, or sinfully soft mouth, a calculating or a kindly look, a vinegary look or an ingratiating smile.

The busiest painter was probably the fractur artist. To this Pennsylvania Dutch artist, lettering intricate scrolls with a goose-quill pen, filling in inks with a cat's-hair brush, many Americans owe the preservation of early family records from birth to death. Other subjects of fractur painting—a technique of illuminating manuscripts that dates back to medieval German monasteries—included the title pages from favorite books, house blessings, scrolls of merit, and novelties of bird-and-flower compositions that owe their interest to penwork, their charm to brilliant washes of color and fanciful designs.

A collection starts

Not all of this folk art is found in museums, nor in the great collections. Mr. and Mrs. Garbisch started collecting primitives with a few favorites they picked up. They tracked down others to use for decorating Pokety, their manor house at Cambridge, Maryland. For this 18th-century country home on a river bank, the finest pieces of American cabinetmaking were searched out to provide a setting for many choice American primitives, which now include a collection of over 2,500 paintings.

Such art is still available to other "collectors," whether you want only one or a hundred paintings. Because of the kinship of primitives with modern art, they are used interchangeably in decorating. This explains the clamor for folk art in the current trend of mixing styles and periods.

The chief reasons why these paintings change owners so often are that many families move to smaller quarters; big estates are dispersed; overgrown collections are pruned; decorating schemes are changed.

Where to go to buy this fluctuating art? Top art dealers and galleries specializing in American primitives have stocks on hand ranging from half a dozen to 300 or 400 paintings, and many send scouts searching the country for others. Most dealers will send photographs of paintings to out-of-town customers upon request. Some issue portfolios of current stocks two or three times a year.

Portraits, landscapes, and still lifes are priced from about $100 up. Portraits are in most plentiful supply, landscapes are the hardest to find.

Antique shops specializing in Early American decorative arts are a sketchy but good source of supply. Country and city art auctions are often a good bet. So are junk and thrift shops. If you're lucky, you may also stumble upon a little gem in dusty attics or barns of about-to-be-demolished old houses.

Many people who would not be able to afford this art can buy honestly labeled reproductions. These are used extensively by decorators and by young homemakers who like in folk art the brash colors, bold planes, and simple statements, with sometimes a hilarious indifference to perspective and anatomy.

Since this type of painting has become so popular, the market has also been flooded with dishonest reproductions. A great number of these forgeries are offered at prices below the prices of authentic paintings. So beware of bargains that sound too good, and whenever possible buy from reputable dealers. If you buy at art auctions, check on authenticity.

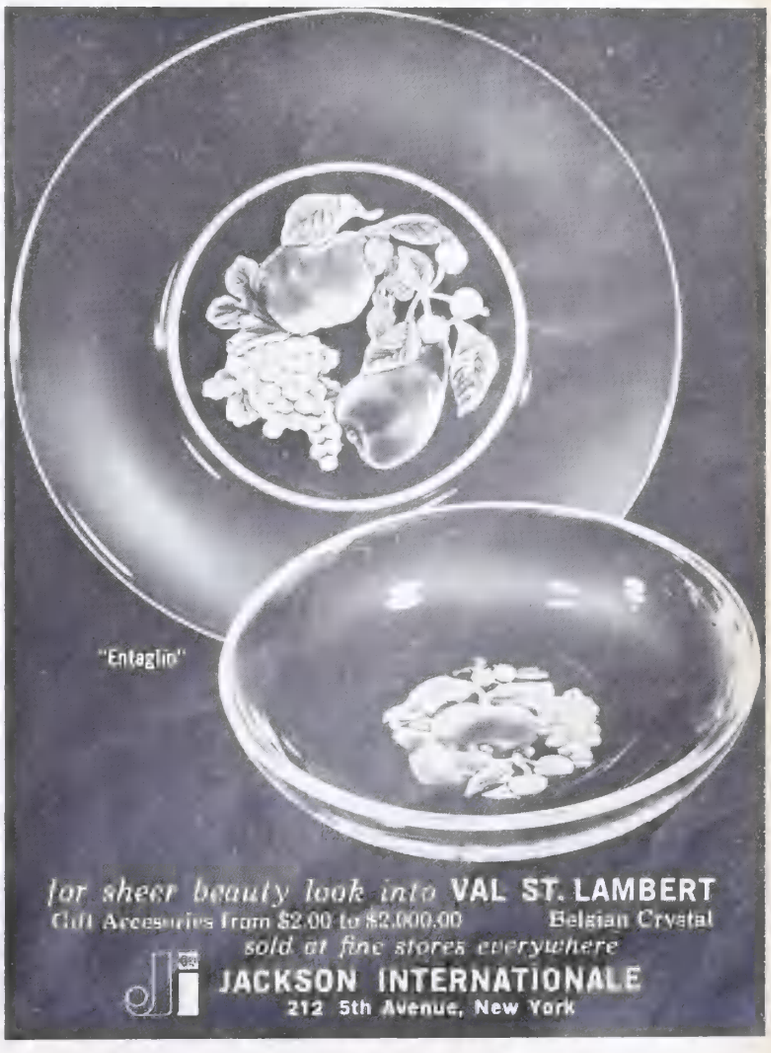
as his flag, the roof his terrace, and all of Central Park at his feet. In authentic Bennett style, it is simple majesty that he has settled for. The white-walled duplex weaves around a courtyard (in reality an airshaft he has disguised with subway grilles), and the impression is of an airborne gallery with earth-colored carpet, earth-colored tile, windows that pivot onto the heavens. The guest bed is an amber leather pad: the round marble table is desk, dining table, and walk-around parlor; the shelf that bisects one wall holds simply framed paintings and lithographs, constantly on the change. Bennett, who cannot stand the idea of things fixed forever, says: "I'd hate to live with two sofas in front of the same fireplace for the rest of my life."

The visitor senses the essence of Bennett here, at the desk made of an oak chopping block and lit with a green glass-shaded lamp, here where the ivy twines through two floors, where garden and stars are available, where Gothic candlesticks, Peruvian sculpture, Irish fabric, hopsacking pillows, buckskin upholstery, and fur afghan excite and soothe the eye.



The man who lives here is not completely easy to read, but he is legible. He is, very basically, Pygmalion, wanting to affect the taste of people and their children "for their future creativity." He is also a perfectionist. To follow him through the showroom where the furniture Bennett designs is casually displayed is to learn something further about Bennett's pride and standards. Because he once designed jewelry, he points with artisan's inner pleasure to the crook in an aluminum chair leg, and one knows without his having to say so that its workmanship is the match of a Tiffany candlestick. The desk, splendid, oblong, with fastidious metal inlay, the discreet chests with hardware that is simply a coin to flip, with smooth edges, proclaim the fine jeweler's touch. Edges are very important to Bennett: there are no "hard edges" anywhere in his designs, he points out time and again. The cane chairs are, of course, woven by hand, the sofas are covered in handmade fabrics. Standing there with the furniture of his design, Bennett reveals much that he has been, some of what his future will be. He is dress designer, set designer, painter, sculptor, poet: he is an Old World artisan, and he will be a New World architect. In his own words, if he has come recently to architecture "through the back door," it is with a great deal of unusual but pertinent front-row exposure and experience.

Reading Thoreau taught Bennett about "the need for privacy and solitude." Hofmann, the painter, taught him about "space, tensions, color." Hattie Carnegie, for whom he did display and won a War Bond display contest in the meanwhile taught him to be "sensitive to what is wrong." From Matisse he learned "that color can breathe"; as for Brancusi, "he was the angel." Perhaps Bennett knows how to design furniture because he was a sculptor, understands planes and lines of a room because he was a painter.

"Maybe I know so much about how welting and tufting go," he says ruefully, "because I was in the rag business for a while, sketching for Saks Fifth and for Seventh Avenue."

Bennett, who began life on Washington Heights in New York City and studied at New York's P.S. 132, has roamed the precipices of beauty the world around from Verona to Venice, from St. Chapelle to Mount Sinai, from the woods of Finland to the islands of Greece. As an architectural designer, he is very much his own prodigy, free from schoolroom dictates, at liberty to admire Frank Lloyd Wright, Mies, Le Corbusier, as well as the master builders of the Greek islands. He is just as free, too, to absorb the merit of bulkhead constructions, docks, telephone-pole networks, gun emplacements, bunkers, or pillboxes, all of which suit his taste for the "right, the natural, the real."

What will evolve in Bennett architecture not even Bennett knows. When he has completed the Bennett adobe, the farmhouse, the tower built on telephone poles, he hopes to furnish each building as well, to design for each one special handmade wooden plates, handmade silver cutlery, furniture sculptured out of the room itself or furnished casually with sit-down baskets or palettes. "Furniture, possessions will be less important all the time," says the designer. "After all," he asks, "what do you need but two lilies, candles, a beige linen tablecloth, a bowl of cheese, and you have the luxury of Vermeer." This may just be the definition of the true Bennett environment. ■ sharpest impact was as a colorist, her influence was soon felt in related areas of textile creation.

Another anecdote, now a standard wisecrack in her studio, points to one of these areas. A woman, looking over her shoulder, was watching her weave. Another weaver looked up from her work and said: "Better not stand too close to that loom—she might just weave you into it." For Mrs. Liebes was putting on her looms virtually any material, however unlikely, that fired her imagination—bamboo half-rounds, crystal rods, rawhide, cellophane, metallic yarns, patent leather, reeds, grass. "Let's try this," she continually said. She created the bamboo curtain and so many other "firsts" that it was as if she had an idea assembly line in her studio.

Anthropology, she discovered as a student in the University of California, was the subject that interested her most. What fascinated her in studying ancient races were the materials used by weavers—Chinese, Coptic, Peruvian, Scandinavian, and especially Japanese—since the dawn of time. Following the prehistoric Swiss Lake Dwellers, she might begin weaving with reeds, but to create a new effect, she would combine the reeds with a synthetic fiber invented the day before yesterday.

A bulletin of the Victoria and Albert Museum in London has underlined the long-range significance of these forays into unexplored worlds of color and materials. Last year, along with three other American designers, her work was exhibited there. The Museum Bulletin commented: "Mrs. Liebes' work is characterized by a daring, imaginative approach that has helped to free the weaver's art from traditional limitations. (Our italics.) This aspect is seen not only in her bold, adventurous color schemes. One of Mrs. Liebes' recent innovations is a custom group of hand- and machine-woven Venetian blinds."

Innovations . . . the studio on Sutter Street in San Francisco had been in operation only a few years before it reached out like a magnet and began drawing architects and decorators through the doors. Here appears another facet of Dorothy Liebes' many-sided influence on American taste. She began working directly with the men and women who were erecting buildings or private homes. They came to the studio with their blueprints, or simply their visions, of the décor to be installed, and together with her the vision became a reality in a fusion of creative abilities. Among the first were the San Francisco architects, Gardner Dailey and Tim Pfleuger; they were followed by Sam Marx, of Chicago, who was building and decorating a private home in Los Angeles; then by Edward Durrell Stone, who saw her work in New York.

Deus ex machina

The Japanese blind became deus ex machina. The famous decorator Frances Elkins had been impressed by the originality of the colors in the rewoven version. When she learned that the erstwhile teenager was now an established designer with 20 craftsmen in her studio, she went to see her. Thereafter, Mrs. Liebes said, "Frances alone kept us busy. There was always something on the loom for her."

Two events finally brought Dorothy Liebes and hand-weaving to the attention of thousands, perhaps millions, of nonprofessionals, who had thought weaving a dead art.

First came the San Francisco World's Fair of 1939. Mrs. Liebes was named Director of Decorative Arts. The building she supervised on Treasure Island was described by newspapers and magazines as a gem. In the Decorative Arts Building, she installed three rooms, each devoted to a craft. Weaving, of course, was one. A contemporary newspaper report said: "Crowds of women, and not a few men, stood for hours watching the shuttles flash back and forth across the looms and the design slowly taking shape." The lost art was alive and healthy.

The second event was World War II. To aid in the therapy of wounded men, Mrs. Liebes helped organize the Arts and Skills project in the Red Cross and became its director. Soon disabled men, some with hands still bandaged, were throwing shuttles through the warp on small, 20-inch looms, weaving their own designs. Operation Warp-Weft, as it might have been called, did not die with the end of the war. It mushroomed in thousands of homes. Many of those who had learned to weave then continued weaving as an avocation. Others became professionals.

"The war," Mrs. Liebes comments, "brought the loom out of the servants' back quarters, where it stood in Colonial days, and into the drawing room." She did so herself. "My loom, hand-carved by Bufano, is the handsomest piece of furniture in my drawing room. For relaxation, I often sit down to weave, instead of playing the piano."

Scores of designers, some of whom learned to weave with her during the war and then continued in her San Francisco and New York studios, later went out on their own. Her "alumni," of whom she is very proud, are working in many American cities as well as in other parts of the world.

The story of Dorothy Liebes' impact now moves to still another, and at first sight a most unlikely, sphere of influence for a woman: engineering.

As a consultant over the years for large corporations—Goodall, Sanford-Bigelow, DuPont, to name a few—she has not been restricted by the capability of the machine. She thought it should be the other way around, that machines should be developed and methods devised to achieve the effects she could get with a hand loom. To do so, she worked with textile engineers and technicians, and eventually ways were found to insinuate the elusive irregularities of hand-woven textiles into the machine woven product, "the impromptu deviation."

The new synthetics

As new synthetic fibers began coming out of the chemistry laboratories, she again went to work with the technicians. She sought means to make it look textured, brushed, crimped, de-lustered or, —vice versa—brightened. Otherwise, she said nylon looked "brutally man-made." Of this phase of her work, Lawrence Roderick Blackhurst, chief of DuPont's

Textile Fibers Division, has said:

"Dorothy Liebes came to us as a missionary comes to the savages—converting us singlehandedly to style. Before she joined DuPont, the deepest the company went into styling was to board the fiber on a boxcar and wave good-by. Dorothy has changed all that."

She creates beauty as naturally as a bee makes honey, but not only in her studio or in the firms for which she is a consultant. Like many artists, Dorothy Liebes has a highly developed social conscience.

One side of her focuses fiercely on her work to the exclusion of everything else, the other on people and a range of activity only indirectly connected with her work—civic duties, committees, juries in art competitions, museum work, fund-raising for art scholarships, the directorship of an art school. A New York bank persuaded her to serve as a director, using the argument that since she knows so much about homes in all income brackets, her advice on home loans would be invaluable. Twice, at the behest of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, she made long journeys through the Southwest, studying Indian schools and showing the weaver tribes the advantages of working on a horizontal rather than a vertical loom. In 1949, the then United States Ambassador to Italy, David Zellerbach, asked her to take a quiet and unofficial look at Italian mills that had received Marshall Plan money. (After one such inspection, incidentally, an Italian technician murmured to a colleague: "The signora is very knowledgeable about the machines. Imagine!")

If all this remotely related activity seems anachronistic, it nonetheless contains a certain logic.

"An artist shouldn't live in a vacuum, an ivory tower," she has often said. "Helping others can help you see the world in the round, and this is where you find inspiration." A mysterious process, below the conscious level.

Her immense satisfaction can be imagined, then, when technological advances make it possible to translate her works to the machine. A fabric that had cost her $35 a yard to weave by hand obviously could go only into the homes of the wealthy or the halls of business or social organizations. Now, in mass production, it came within range of a modest family budget. The ingredients might not be identical but the authentic hand-woven look was there. She was delighted when she saw machine translations of her fabrics appearing in department stores and happily recalled the observation of Henry Dreyfuss, the industrial designer, who said: "The department store has suddenly become the people's museum."

John Charles Daly, the distinguished television commentator, saw her influence transcending art and industry and making itself felt in another dimension. Introducing her when she received the Elsie De Wolfe Award from the American Institute of Interior Design, Daly said:

"The world of which we are a part has become so complex that every aspect of life can and does contribute to, or detract from, our hopes for the future. For instance, the economic competition, which progressively occupies center stage in what we call the Cold War, is, at its roots, a competition in standards of living. We need to understand that the character of this competition is changing every day and that the struggle in the future will grow more subtle and more demanding as creature comforts yield to the expanding needs of the spirit of each individual.

"One truth of our history is that we have reached great estate as a nation because, as a people, we have always reached for the stars. It is my privilege to present to this assembly one who has put stars in our eyes and into that intimate world in which we live our daily lives." ■ of both sexes, leaving them, their ideas, and their purveyors of décor precisely where they belong—on their false bottoms." In Mona Lisa's Mustache, he explored at witty but dead-serious length what he felt to be sinister evidences of a "cult of the occult" and a decided inclination toward fascism in avant-garde art. In 1954, when Americans were happily settling down everywhere in shiny new clichés of split-level ranch houses with picture windows, he took this all apart in Homes of the Brave. His latest book, written in collaboration with his long-time associate, Carlton W. Pullin, deals with—you guessed it—Furniture of Classical Greece, and is so titled.

Whatever their date, we can speak of Gibbings' pieces in the present, because they are as desirable today as in the past, notably devoid of that look of datedness that has been the undoing of so much that was called modern not too long ago. A consistent characteristic is the curved line. You see it in smoothly turned, almost sculptural frames, chair backs so gracefully arched that the wood might well have been sculptor's clay, corners so rounded that right angles melt into subtle softness, in gently, gradually attenuated rungs and splats. There is tactile invitation here, too. Seeing this fluidity of line, you have the urge to touch it, to pass your hand over these pleasant surfaces. Characteristic also are quality of material and workmanship, a concern for the beauty of wood, and the elegance of stone and metal. There are surfaces of marble and hardware like jewels of brass, and there was once a table inlaid in silver, worthy of a maharani's palace.

In the fifties, such furniture was hailed as the herald of a new romanticism in a time when designers of intellectual, functional "modern" seemed to have been bogged down drearily in their own clean-cut lines. But the Gibbings look was then, and is now, a glimpse of that ageless beauty that is revealed every once in a while, yet seems always to have been.

It is what Mr. Gibbings feels we are all in search of. In 1961, he commented that sticklers for functionalism had lost sight of the fact that the major function of human belongings is that they please us emotionally, no matter how practically and "honestly" they work. Attempting to analyze the growing acceptance of the romantic look, he wrote in the May, 1955 issue of HOUSE BEAUTIFUL: "To say the human heart is in search of novelty or 'modernity' is to ignore its deepest and most profound longing. It is beauty, in the oldest meaning of the word, that we are all searching for. To find it, we must search for it through all time."

There is something prophetic in this, presaging as it seems to the present era's eclecticism, in which the search appears to be on in all times and all places for furnishings we choose to live with. Writing from Greece in typical Gibbings timbre, he does not exactly make the rafters ring with applause for what he calls this "new and swinging tutti-frutti being served up by decorators with little knowledge of history and furniture." He sees it, sympathetically enough, as the individual's desperate yearning to live with something other than "corporation modernity"—his tag for the steely, glassy, hard-line interior design, which is supposed to make executive suites look like home during the business tycoon's working day. But he gives this warning: "I don't want to sound academic, but after all, if a girl is going to start what she calls 'blending,' she is more likely to make a better brew if she knows chinoiserie from Shinnecock Indian. Interior design that combines elements from completely different cultures requires the eye of a hawk, the sensitivity of a Geiger counter, and the artistry of the Muses."

Mr. Gibbings, who summers enthusiastically in the Greek islands, has just completed a house on the island of Skyros and—this should amount to sight-seeing stops on the itinerary of every design-conscious American tourist—a jewelry shop in Athens and new furniture showrooms for Saridis, the company that produces his re-creations of classical Greek furniture designs.

Those who would like to review the history-making designs of Robsjohn-Gibbings will find many of them in the following HOUSE BEAUTIFUL issues: November 1948, May 1950, November 1951, May 1952, May 1953, May 1954, May 1955, November 1958, April 1961, November 1961. ■

Now you can enjoy guaranteed savings of at least 40% on the best-selling biographies you want

"If only I could live more than one life!" Which of us has never entertained this secret wish?

Perhaps this explains the special excitement that biography readers feel whenever a particularly interesting new biography comes along. For such a book offers a chance to live another life, in another place, another time; yet it is not an "escape from reality," but rather an escape into reality. A really good biography combines the exciting reality of business, art, science, or politics, with the wisdom to be learned from the triumphs and follies of the famous and infamous.

Now, to keep you informed on the new biographies that most richly offer this satisfaction—and to deliver right to your door the ones you decide you want, at guaranteed savings of at least 40%—here is the new BIOGRAPHY BOOK CLUB.

And to attract the special breed of readers it was designed for, this especially inviting offer is being made to Charter Members. You may have any three of these Biography Book Club books (total value $17.40 to $27.40 in the publishers' editions) all for only $1 plus shipping.

How the Club works

Membership in the Club is simple, sensible, and flexible.

The editors read hundreds of manuscripts of forthcoming books submitted by all leading publishers. From these, they choose one outstanding biography a month. This selection is then reviewed, in advance of publication, in the members' free monthly bulletin, which also describes other outstanding biographies of the season.

If you want the selection, the special Club edition will be rushed to you as soon as the publisher's original edition is released in the bookstores. Or you may specify an alternate—or no book at all—on the form provided.

Members take only four selections in two years

For each book you do take, you will be billed the special members' price, guaranteed to be at least 40% less than the price of the publisher's edition. And every fourth purchase entitles you to choose a bonus book free. It adds up to just about the best discount anywhere on just-published biographies.

Why not try it? All your Charter Membership calls for is the purchase of four selections or alternates in the next two years, out of well over a hundred to be offered. And as you can judge from the quality of the Club books on this page, it is inconceivable that you will not find at least four selections or alternates during that time that you will be particularly eager to read. To enter your Charter Membership, just mail the coupon to BIOGRAPHY BOOK CLUB, Garden City, New York.

BIOGRAPHY BOOK CLUB
Dept. 6N-HBX, Garden City, N.Y.

Please enter my Charter Membership and send me the three books whose numbers I have printed in the boxes below:

Bill me only $1 plus shipping for all three books. However, if not delighted with them, I may return them in 10 days and my membership will be cancelled.

If I decide to continue, I agree to purchase on my Club charge account as few as four more selections or alternates during the next TWO years at the members' special price, guaranteed to be at least 40% less than the publishers' editions (a modest charge is added for shipping). Each month you will send me the free Club bulletin describing the forthcoming selection and other worthwhile biographies, together with a convenient form for requesting an alternate or no book at all if I do not wish to receive the selection. Every fourth purchase of a selection or alternate will entitle me to choose a bonus book free.

For 1967... Surprisingly New! Superbly Cadillac!

Who else but Cadillac could introduce a personal car as fabulous as the Eldorado—and at the same time offer you eleven more of the newest and most exciting luxury cars ever created! Each new Cadillac is, in its own way, a masterpiece. There is dramatic new styling throughout, beautiful new interiors and a host of significant advancements, including a new padded instrument panel...a more responsive Cadillac engine...improved variable ratio power steering...and a new General Motors-developed energy absorbing steering column. The remarkable new Eldorado—the most eagerly anticipated, most talked about new luxury car of the decade—provides the spirit and action of a performance car with the comfort and elegance of a luxury car. It is the first car in the world to combine front wheel drive, variable ratio power steering and automatic level control for a totally new driving experience. These are but a few of the many achievements that make the 1967 Cadillacs incomparable in comfort, unmatched in performance and unexcelled in safety and convenience. See and drive the extraordinary 1967 Cadillacs before the week is out. You will agree that dignity has never looked so daring!

When you care enough to send the very best

Mrs. Murphy's new bedroom carpet is Mrs. Murphy's old living room carpet. It will lead a quieter life now, but it has its memories. Mrs. Murphy, like many owners of Acrilan, has discovered that old carpets made with Acrilan® acrylic in the pile don't die; they move upstairs. In the living room Mrs. Murphy has replaced Acrilan with Acrilan. After all, she's lived and learned.

When you're old enough to know better.

BOOK-DIVIDENDS: The most economical system ever devised for building up a home library

THE PURPOSE of this suggested trial membership is to demonstrate, by your own actual experience, four things important for every reading family. First, that membership in the Book-of-the-Month Club will keep you from missing, through overbusyness, the new books you fully intend to read; second, that you will pay on the average 20% less for those books than you otherwise would; third, that you have a wide choice—more than 200 books a year; and fourth, that under the Club's Book-Dividend system, you will get useful and beautiful volumes for trifling sums.

✶ If you continue after this experimental membership, you will receive, with every Club choice you buy, a Book-Dividend Certificate. Each Certificate, together with a nominal sum, often only $1.00 or $1.50—somewhat more for unusually expensive volumes—can be redeemed for a valuable Book-Dividend which you may choose from over a hundred fine library volumes whose retail prices average $7.

This is probably the most economical means ever devised for building a well-rounded personal library. Since its inauguration, the almost incredible sum of $370,000,000 worth of books (retail value) has been earned and received by members of the Book-of-the-Month Club through this unique plan.

We think stainless should look like stainless.

That's not as silly as it may sound. The fact is, a good many stainless steel patterns look as though they were designed for silver. But not ours. When we make stainless, we never think of it as being second best to silver. We make sure it's beautiful in its own right.

Our patterns are especially designed for stainless steel. With clean, simple lines that add to the modern look and contemporary feeling of the metal itself. Besides fitting the everyday function of stainless in your home.

But there is one similarity between our stainless and sterling. The craftsmanship.

A good example of what we mean is Saturna, at right. It takes the steady hand of a man named Kenneth Glenn to give it that texture. Piece by piece.

Yet it costs just $59.95 for a 50-piece service for eight.

The same 50-piece service in Astra (center) is $79.95. And in Today (far right) it's $59.95.

If you want stainless that looks like stainless (but gets made like sterling), look for the new "IS" hallmark wherever fine silverware is sold.

To get a free color brochure of all our patterns, write to The International Silver Company, Meriden, Connecticut.

When your Allen finally comes, you'll know why you waited

You waited to admire the handcrafted cabinetry and the way it enhances your room setting. You waited to touch the tempting keyboard. And finally, you waited to play your very own Allen. To enjoy, with your family in your own home, the tone professional organists prefer. This is the excitement you waited for when you chose Allen.

We're sorry you had to wait at all. But we've had so many orders to fill we just couldn't deliver an Allen the moment you ordered one. We wanted to, but we wouldn't lower our standards or eliminate custom features for the sake of faster delivery. An Allen—your Allen—like any fine instrument, takes time to build. And we build them for a lifetime of enjoyment.

For those still thinking about an organ for the home, may we suggest you ask your own church organist about Allen? It's the best way to get an unbiased opinion. Then play and listen to an Allen yourself at your Allen Dealer's showroom. Ask him to demonstrate the newest Allen exclusives like Presence Projectors—another reason why Allen really is the one organ worth waiting for.

To the woman whose children seem to get more food on the floor than in their mouths:

This carpet was made for you.

Chances are, you've always wanted carpeting in your dining room, but you didn't want to grow old and grey worrying about it from breakfast to dinner.

This is one of our patterned carpets called Stature. It's just about the last dining room carpet you'll have to worry about.

It's milk-proof, tea-proof, greasy-stain proof, you get the idea. Even if a stain gets deep down and you let it dry, it'll still come out. (That is, if you can find it among the beautiful "camouflaging" pattern.)

Stature is woven from 100% Acrilan® acrylic fiber, which accounts for the fact that it's also moth-proof, and mildew-proof.

And we wove it tightly to wear especially well in those extra "wear" places.

Stature is available in a nice, big collection of imaginative designs and deep-dyed colors.

If you've got French Provincial furniture, we've got a French Provincial pattern.

If you've got modern furniture, we've got a modern pattern.

Name your decor, we have a pattern to go with it.

To carpet a 9 x 12 dining room with Stature will cost under $140.00 (plus a truly modest charge for padding and installation.)

Now that doesn't seem very much for a carpet that lets you have your cake and eat it too.

This is only one in a series of ads that Mohawk Carpet is running with the following purpose in mind: we plan to take over your house.

THE $80 DIFFERENCE

The hands of the Heritage finisher scour, sand and massage the coarse grain. And oak is brought to a mellow beauty. When a table, or any piece of furniture, takes on a dimension that only the hands of a man can produce, only more money can buy it.

You might be able to find a table that looks like this for around $90. But you won't be buying the same table or one that's even close. If you're lucky, a close look or a fingertip run against the grain will tell you so in the showroom. Most times, though, it's after you've bought the table... when a light scratch shows up its shallow finish.

This Heritage cocktail table costs about $170. Or $80 more than its "look-alike." The finish on this table didn't come in a one-coat kit. It was built up from bleached wood, stained, fixed with a sealer, sanded, glazed and lacquered.

This was the surface the Heritage finisher shaded... highlighting the turn of the grain, adding depth to the curves of the carving, pitting and specking the surface. Another coat of lacquer, a scour with steel wool and a wax brought the wood to its bottomless glow. The hands of the Heritage finisher had developed a beauty unknown to raw oak... and unique to the grain of the table.

When wood is given new beauty like this, a table costs more money. The higher price on this table—or any other piece of furniture we make—reflects deep-seated qualities only more money can buy. Not just a finish unmatched by machine or shortcut method. But the stretching, stitching and shaping that holds the lines of a Heritage sofa. The way we'll finish a leg on a sofa... whether or not it's meant to hide behind kick pleats.

When you find work like this, you'll see the Heritage name. Hanging from this countrified Louis Quinze cocktail table. Burned inside the drawers of a Heritage chest. Nestled beneath the cushions of a monumental sofa or an appealing loveseat. Swinging from a hangtag on one of our wing chairs.

If you would like to know more about Heritage furniture and see how it could fit into your home, send two dollars for a Heritage catalog collection and room planning kit, to Dept. [illegible], Heritage Furniture Co., High Point, North Carolina.

;reat Greek idea of a rug. Only 5,200 drachmas.

ranslated into U.S. currency, 's a little less than a hundred and nty-five dollars. Which is a lot than a round trip to Crete, re we got this ancient design. /e retold it in strong nylon. So can treasure it without having to watch every step you take. You can even hang it. For a rug, it's quite a tapestry.

Knossos has a primitive personality.

Right down to its heavy knotted fringe. But we left out the folksy flaws. When we tag a rug Lees, it has to be as close to perfect as we can get it.

Knossos comes in cool Aegean Sea blue and green tones. Warm Tangera rust and bronze tones. And other ancient colors. In a number of sizes.

Did you ever think about a little Greek accent to go with your Danish, English, French, Early American or Oriental?

For a lot of good, down-to-earth reasons, "those heavenly carpets by Lees."

People, Places, Pleasures

By DUNCAN MacDONALD

Widely known for her daily interview program on New York's WQXR, Miss MacDonald is an acute observer of the many worlds of esthetics, entertainment, travel, and the home

STERNER DAYS: Cooler and sterner days now that we're all—even the most reluctant—back from the mountains, the country, and the shore.

Shepherd Mead of the elongated book titles (How to Succeed in Business Without Really Trying; Dudley, There IS No Tomorrow; Then How About This Afternoon?) is back at his dwelling at St. George's Hill, in Weybridge, England. During his absence this summer, two of the Beatles (John Lennon and Ringo Starr) acquired houses "within the flight of a tennis ball" from his house. How did that go? How to succeed without . . . what?

STERN CHARACTER: The Spartan thing seems to be all right with Shepherd. During his European vacation, spent with his wife and three children at Tellaro, a fishing village on the Tuscany coast near La Spezia, Shepherd sprang from his bed each morning at seven and plunged into the Mediterranean. Then he ate a breakfast of Italian coffee, rolls, and jam. Another plunge—but this time into three hours of wrestling with the Muse. He says he can't face a typewriter for more than three hours each day.

ESP—ENGLISH STYLE: In writing his latest book, The Carefully Considered Rape of the World, which concerns outer space, Shepherd Mead said that he had done very heavy research in astronomy and molecular biology and had had an unusual experience: "When I started writing, there were times when I went into a spell of what psychologists call 'automatic writing'—I had a feeling of ecstasy. Whether it really happened that this was coming to me on some extrasensory-perception wave length from a planet 50 light-years away or from a mental telepathy computer on the moon, or what, we'll never know."

ESP—NEWFOUNDLAND STYLE: As a writer, Shepherd Mead probably knows that Nana, the Newfoundland dog-nurse of Peter Pan, was a participant in James Barrie's own boyhood activities and so was included in his play. But he may not know that, like himself, "Newfs" are high in ESP.

Margaret and Vadim Chute, who are responsible for some of our country's most famous Newfoundlands, and are the owners of Little Bear Farms, New Milford, Connecticut, give numerous examples of sensitivity and supersensitivity on the part of these magnificent creatures—factual accounts of their valiant behavior in rescuing children, carrying lifelines from foundering vessels, and finally being checked out at Duke University, where they were found to have an extraordinarily high ESP quotient.

Margaret Chute tells of speeding over the highway, taking Ch. Little Bear Thurber II to the veterinarian, when a state policeman signaled her off the road. When he started to berate her, she explained. At this point, Little Bear placed his bandaged paw quietly on the window sill of the car, and gave the trooper a significant glance from soulful eyes. End of diatribe. End of explanation.

MAGEE "COLOR FLAIR" CARPET PILE IS 100% POLYCREST OLEFIN FIBER.

Can a young woman who marries an absent-minded professor find happiness with a carpet of Polycrest in the dining room?

"Oh, Byron. How I hate to see you leave in the morning. All those pretty young coeds in English 101."

"But you know that I love you, Myrna..."

Yes, it was true. He loved her. Nothing was too good for her. Just last week he'd bought her this beautiful carpet of genuine Polycrest olefin. Such soft, luxurious pile. Such a rich pattern.

And so many beautiful colors to choose from.

Carpet is Magee's "Color Flair."

How could he afford it on a teacher's salary, she'd wondered.

Polycrest isn't so expensive, he'd assured her. Actually it looks like carpets twice the price.

Byron kissed her tenderly on the cheek and poured his morning coffee all over the Polycrest.

"Oh, Byron, you've done it again."

But she wasn't really upset. Fortunately, Polycrest was the most stain-resistant type of carpet fiber you could buy. The coffee would wipe up with a damp sponge.

"Run along now," she told him "you'll be late for your class."

"Funny," he said as he went out the door, "but I keep thinking I've forgotten something."

NEW ENGLAND THANKSGIVING: Thanksgiving weekend will find Martha Graham, America's greatest contemporary dancer and choreographer, in Boston. No performance on Thanksgiving Day, however. Over the years, Miss Graham has tried to avoid this, perhaps out of deference to her ancestor, Miles Standish. Through her mother, she is a direct descendant of the Pilgrim Father.

Not even once in a generation does a personality come along in one of the arts with the power to reshape it and change its direction. Martha Graham has had just that revolutionary influence on modern dance. She was honored by Harvard earlier this year with a doctorate, only the fourth woman to be so honored in its 330-year history. And the Aspen Institute for Humanistic Studies chose Miss Graham from over one hundred scholars, philosophers, writers, and statesmen for its award last year, declaring her the foremost living exponent of modern dance and stating that she had "inspired millions to understand and appreciate man's nature, purposes, and destiny."

It was Keats who said, "Beauty is truth, truth beauty," and although Miss Graham's doctor-father did not approve of her dancing, he was an important influence on her thinking, pointing out this relationship between beauty and truth. She told me that she was looking at a drop of water through a microscope one day when she was four years old.

"Now, you see, Martha," he said, "it is very clear and very beautiful, isn't it?" She agreed that it was. When they looked again and saw the little wrigglings in there, he said, "You must look for the truth." She has been looking for truth and beauty ever since.

Having performed in most corners of the world under the auspices of our State Department, Martha Graham is now on tour of her own country—the first in 15 years—and sponsored by our Government. The tour started in early October on the East Coast and will continue for eight weeks, as far as Santa Barbara, San Francisco, and Los Angeles. It will conclude back East in Ithaca, New York, on December 2nd.

STELLAR MAN: All kinds of stars are shot up into the artistic heavens by Beni Montresor, a young gentleman of Verona. First, his sets, costumes, and lighting for La Gioconda at the new Metropolitan Opera in Lincoln Center. Then, on October 18th, his debut as an opera director for the New York City Opera production of The Magic Flute. Late in November, Beni goes off to London to apply final artistic touches to his set designs for the Berlioz opera, Benvenuto Cellini, which opens the season at Covent Garden.

Although it would seem that no one person could cover so much ground, Beni has found time to illustrate seven children's books, and to illustrate and write three others: House of Flowers, House of Stars; Cinderella; and The Witches of Venice. In the latter, Beni captures for children the beauty of his favorite city. For adults, who can travel outside the pages of a book, Beni suggests, "Visit Venice in the winter, when there are few people there and the city is like a castle on the water. The streets are corridors, the squares are rooms. There is a feeling that you are 'inside' as you move about the city."

Of his own private castle, a large apartment in New York's Greenwich Village, Beni says, "My work is the focal point of each room. The entire setting is white, with green plants everywhere. I feel New York is such a crowded city, and my costumes and settings have so much color, I need a neutral background for designing. I have 37 windows, and I see the sky and the stars from every corner."

Beni seems to have an affinity for stars. In the near future he will send up another star—a ballet based on The Witches of Venice. ■

What good is a dishwasher detergent if it's no good in your water?

Every dishwasher detergent manufacturer knows that no one dishwasher detergent works equally well in all kinds of water. Yet nobody does anything about it — except the makers of FINISH. They have developed special formulas of FINISH for different types of water. Before they send your Special Formula FINISH into your area they test it in various types of water prevalent in your area. They make sure that your Special Formula FINISH washes dishes cleaner and shines glasses brighter than any other detergent.

It stands to reason that the world's largest producers of dishwasher detergents wouldn't go so far out of their way to give you a better product if it weren't important. LET'S PUT ON SOME RECORDS AND DANCE

It's been years and years since popular music and dancing have been in such happy rapport

By JOHN S. WILSON

Popular music and jazz reviewer for The New York Times

Suddenly there's so much you can dance to, so much you want to dance to, and such a variety of dance music that you wonder where to begin.

It's not all discothèque dancing now. When you roll back the carpet, you don't necessarily have to throw yourself into the twist, the watusi, the frug, or any of the more extreme invitations to dislocation.

This year you can stack up records on the changer and dance to almost anything your heart desires or your feet can cope with. You can dance to bands that know the old rhythmic way of dance bands—dance to swing music, dance to sweet music, dance Latin, dance the polka, or even swirl around in a romantic waltz.

It's been a long time coming back—years and years during which vocalists dominated the music world, single or en masse, and audiences were supposed to sit and listen.

But dance music is here again, and the listeners are getting up out of their seats and back onto the dance floor.

What's made the difference?

The discothèques were a beginning. But it's the return to dance music of some of the great names of the golden years of the dance bands that has given the renaissance a broad, solid foundation. Harry James, Benny Goodman, Carmen Cavallaro, and Count Basie, who have spent most of the past dozen years concertizing, are back on the dance floors. New orchestras in the great dance band tradition are turning up—Si Zentner's, for instance. They have beefed up the thin but sturdy ranks of dance bands that never gave up—Guy Lombardo, Lawrence Welk, and Jan Garber, who still serve up their stylized music, and the "ghost" bands of Jimmy Dorsey, now led by trumpeter Lee Castle, and the Glenn Miller band, which is under clarinetist Buddy de Franco.

Bob Crosby, who added a Dixieland flavor to the dancing thirties, has been lured back to the bandstand, leading his Bob Cats in the Rainbow Grill away up on the 65th floor of the RCA Building in New York—a glamorous setting for dancing that is even more breath-taking than ever now that a glass sheath encircles the room on three sides to give dancers an unparalleled view of Wonderland by night.

In November, Duke Ellington will play his first dance engagement in New York in almost two decades, when he brings his band into the Riverboat, a huge, terraced room underneath the Empire State Building.

These two rooms—the Riverboat and the Rainbow Grill—have been the bellwethers in establishing the new, vital atmosphere. For today's dancers, they are what such fabled places as the Glen Island Casino, Frank Dailey's Meadowbrook, or the Café Rouge of the Hotel Pennsylvania were to an earlier generation of New Yorkers, what the Aragon and Trianon ballrooms and the Blackhawk Restaurant were to Chicago, what the Palomar ballroom was to Los Angeles.

Ballrooms and hotel rooms such as these nourished the great bands of the dancing years between World War I and World War II. On the air, night after night, they left indelible musical memories—the pulse-raising promise of their signature themes and then the distinctive styles and personalities that gave each band its identity—the silken sound of Tommy Dorsey's trombone as young Frank Sinatra sang with the Pied Pipers; the driving excitement of Benny Goodman's "killer dillers" with Harry James's brash trumpet

leaping out ahead of everything: Bea Wain singing My Reverie with Larry Clinton's orchestra: the surging beauty of Glenn Miller's clarinet-led saxophone ensembles; Hal Kemp's jittery trumpets: and the breathless voice of Skinnay Ennis.

It was a wonderful time when all the world seemed to move in rhythm. It was a time when, for a few years, popular music and jazz were joined, the melody and sentiment of one combining with the rhythmic excitement of the other to create the music called swing. Radio was the great communicator, and dance bands could play to nation-wide audiences night after night. Sidemen and singers built followings of their own, springboards that started Gene Krupa and Tony Pastor and Peggy Lee on their roads to fame. These bands and their dance music formed a core around which social life, particularly young social life, surged.

And then it stopped.

Not suddenly, because World War II intervened, and there were other things to be done. But when the war was over, nothing was quite the same. The once-young dancers were busy being young parents. The next potential generation of dancers found its musical idols not in bands but in singers—in Frank Sinatra and Perry Como and Dick Haymes. A wartime tax on dancing that was continued in the postwar years induced many club owners to fill their dance floors with tables. Audiences adjusted to listening instead of dancing. Even jazz, which had always been an integral part of dance music, turned its back on dancers as jazz musicians took up bebop and what was known in the years after the war as "modern jazz."

Young America sat out the fifties. Those of their elders whose dancing spirit was unquenchable found that Latin bands were filling part of the dance band vacuum. So they learned to mambo and to cha-cha and they bounced to the brisk, homogenized rhythms of society bands, typified by Lester Lanin and Meyer Davis.

When rock 'n' roll captured the teen-age world in the middle of the fifties, the adult ear could hear only the clangor and banality of the music, the adult eye was appalled by the gyrations of Elvis Presley's hips. Relatively few could discern any hopeful signs for dancers.

Yet, even though the beat was elementary, it was also compelling—Presley's body English was proof enough of that. Youngsters who had been nonparticipant listeners, contentedly huddled around juke boxes, began to respond to the music by getting up and moving around in simple dance steps. Count Basie was one of the perceptive few who could see what was coming. At a time when almost the only possible adult reaction to rock 'n' roll was unmitigated horror, Basie blandly said he thought rock 'n' roll was fine.

"It's got the kids dancing again," he pointed out, "and I'm in favor of anything that brings back dancing."

Rock 'n' roll eventually did more than get the kids dancing. Through them and through the dances they evolved, it brought adults into the picture.

When the discothèque, that super-juke-box, was spawned, it immediately appealed to a young adult generation bred on rock 'n' roll. And with the rush of publicity that attended the spread of the discothèque, dancing began to regain stature as a social activity.

Of course, it wasn't quite the kind of dancing that the rock 'n' roller's parents had done to the music of Glenn Miller or Glen Gray or even Benny Goodman. The style was untouchably solo rather than intimately duo and, for proper participation, it invited an even more drastic crack in the sacroiliac than the Latin dances that Betty Garrett dismissed when she sang, South America, Take It Away.

Frenetic discothèque dancing could galvanize the jet set and its satellites. But it frustrated a large galaxy of potential dancers who were more nostalgic than supple. The urge to dance was on them, but the new style was usually beyond them. Then Bert Kaempfert, the German orchestra leader and arranger, provided a bridge for these would-be dancers. His records combined an approximation of a contemporary beat with an approximation of a traditional sound, a mixture that felt right and sound-

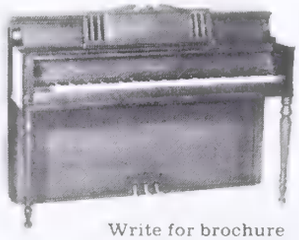
The concert hall piano for people who don't give their concerts in a concert hall.

A piano that sounds its best in a concert hall can sound wrong in a living room. There's a reason.

To keep music lovers happy in the concert hall, you need a piano that rates high in both tone and volume. But put the same piano in a living room, and it might just drive everyone out. The sound is too big.



Now take Chickering.

We have all the richness and sonority it takes to please the critical ear. It has the concert hall tone all right. Only we make the volume on strictly a living room scale. After all, you don't have to reach people in the balcony.

Our action is smooth and swift enough for professionals. Or for someone who just wants to playfully finger out Brahms' Lullaby.

You'd have to say Chickering is somewhat intimate. It's more friendly around the price tag, too.

The plain fact is, we've done more than anyone else to improve the sound and mechanics of pianos. And we've been doing it longer (144 years to be exact). So there's no reason we can't say our family piano sounds as good as anyone else's concert piano. We've simply never cared to be loud about it. That's all.

ed right to both sides of the dancing fence.

Once the traditional dancers were back in action, the stage was set for their kind of music. It is on this wave of response that the dance bands—"traditional" dance bands such as Harry James's and Woody Herman's and Benny Goodman's—have begun to play for dancers again.

As a result of their return, dancers today can choose from a full spectrum of musical sounds and dancing styles. On records, you can find it all. You can dance not only in the present but even through memories of the past—through long-playing reissues of the great recordings of Glenn Miller in the forties, of Benny Goodman and Artie Shaw in the thirties.

On the following list, you'll find records for dancers of every persuasion. (Stereo in parentheses.)

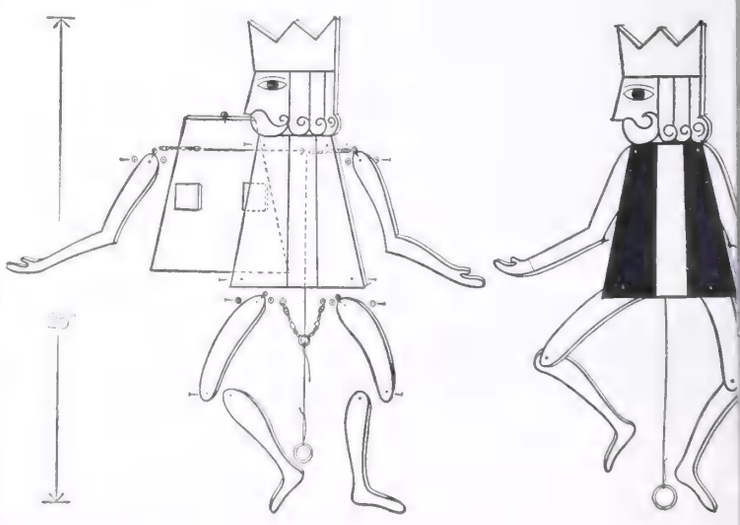
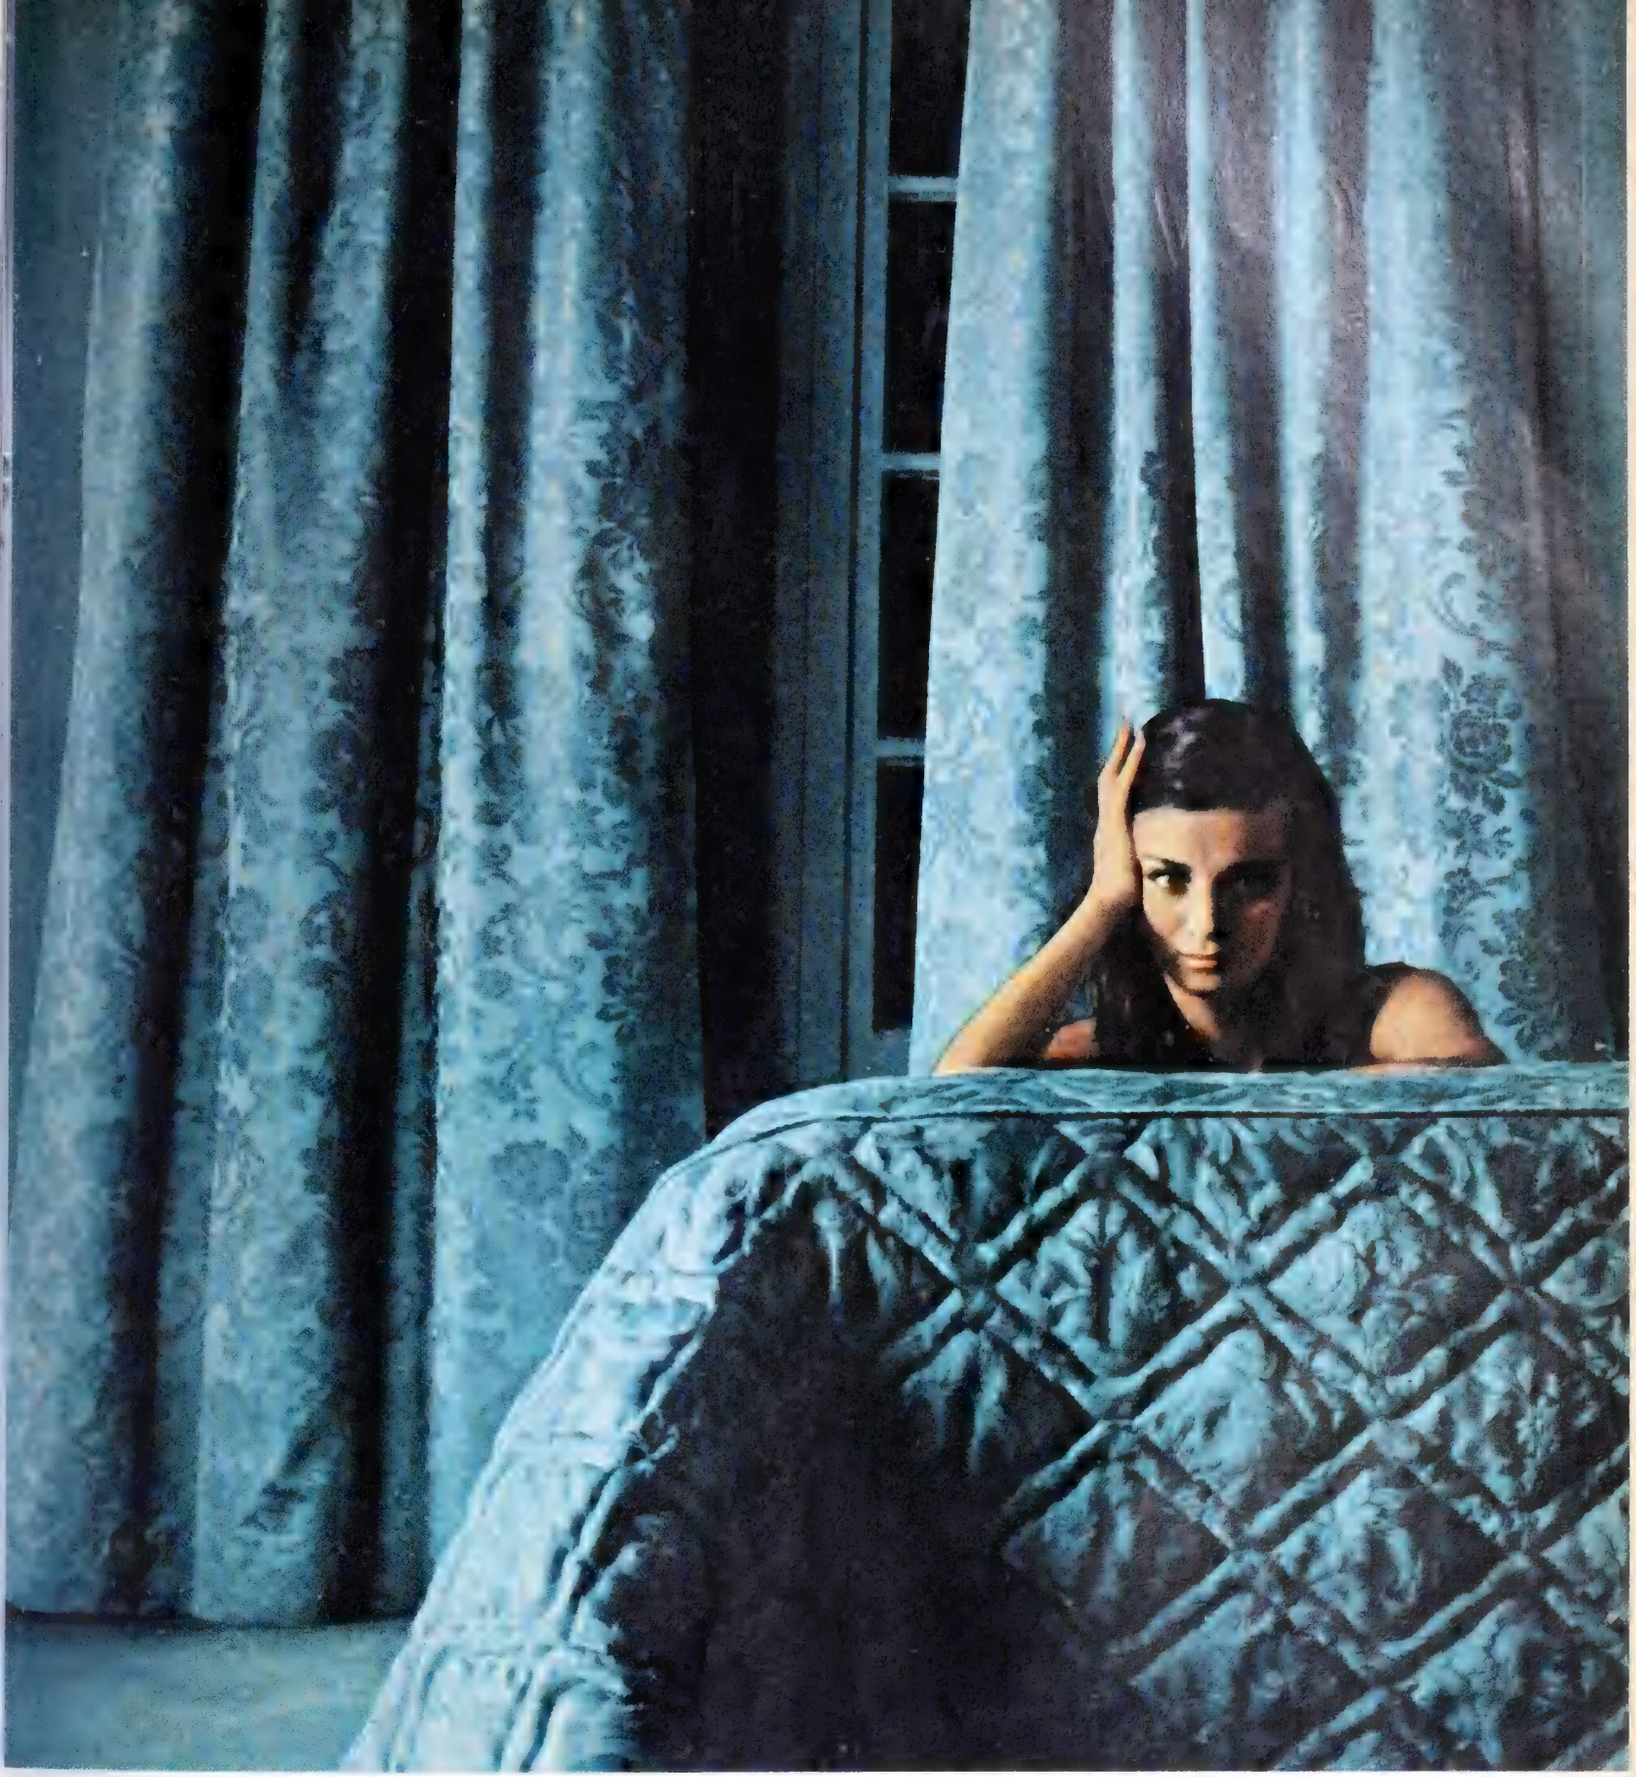
The delight of a child whose father makes him a Jumping Jack is matched only by the fascination these figures have for adults. Each figure can be cut from a 16-inch square of ¼-inch plywood, nine from a 4-by-4-foot panel.



GIFTS TO MAKE FOR FUN AND DECORATION

JUMPING JACKS

Pull the string, and they jump. Bend or extend the legs, and they can be made to sit up. By means of a screw eye, they can hang on the wall. For children, they can mean hours of imaginative play.



Jumping Jacks, made of ¼-inch plywood, are an easy and rewarding project for the home craftsman. Only the simplest tools are needed: a coping saw, hammer, and paintbrush. With a small power jigsaw or bandsaw, the figures can easily be turned out in quantity.

ALICE UCHIYAMA

Dimensions for all figures are approximately the same. Head and body are 13½ inches high. Arms measure 11½ inches, with the elbow at midpoint. The lower leg is 6¾ inches and the upper 7¾, extending 1½ to 2½ inches into the body. There is a ¾-inch overlap at the knee. It is usually best to keep color scheme simple and bold. The most useful tempera colors are red, black, white, and yellow. All Jumping Jacks were designed by Sarah Stein.

Under $60 For both the draperies and the bedspread as shown.

Draperies alone could cost this much. The corners are mitered. The generous hems are blind-stitched. The pinch pleats are individually sewn for a deeper fan, a fuller fold.

And the spread is tailored of the same elegant fabric as the draperies. In twin, full, king or queen sizes. It's puffed with Kodel®. Quilted deep enough to sink into. Cut amply to cover the fattest pillow.

How are we able to ensemble the custom look for so little? Easily!

Available at retail stores. Prices slightly higher on the west coast.

Because we design, weave, cut, tailor, and line our draperies. Do just about everything. From start to finish. That way, we save money. You save, too.

Some of our ensembles cost more. Many cost less. We're sure we have one for your boudoir. In a color you crave.

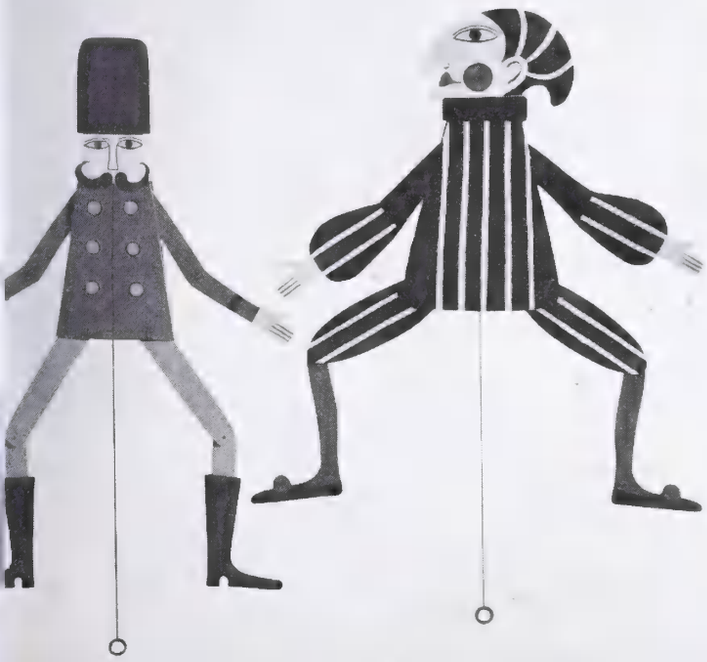
can be whatever may be most appealing or meaningful to the child. Comic-strip caricatures, storybook favorites, or real-life acquaintances (human or animal) can be the inspiration.

The Jacks are best made of ¼-inch whitewood plywood, but Duraply, an overlaid plywood, is also good. Both are splinter-free, and exceptionally smooth-surfaced. Arms and legs are attached with brads or very small nails. They can be bent over and clinched where they penetrate the back surface. Thin washers, at the joints where arms and legs join the body, act as spacers, assuring easy movement.



Joining each arm and leg to the other arm and leg are safety snap swivels connected by split rings—tiny devices sold at fishing tackle counters. They cost about three cents each. The pull cord is 15-pound-test nylon fishing line, or 50-pound-test monofilament line. The screw eyes have a ¼-inch eye.

The figure's back and front are spaced apart, and at the same time joined with 1-by-1-inch plywood blocks, attached with white glue. The doubled nylon line running from the upper to the lower split ring is the shortest length that can be used with arms and legs in down position.

All parts are painted before assembly. Tempera is the best to use. It handles easily and is opaque. Only the front surface need be painted. When the tempera is dry, apply a coat or two of flat varnish over it. Varnishing the unpainted surfaces helps prevent warping. The figures shown here measure 25 inches high with legs fully extended, and 24 inches from fingertip to fingertip. But the size can be varied.

If you don't have the time, inclination, or facilities to make them yourself, King, Punch, and Knight figures, like those illustrated, are available ready-made, 31 inches high, for $15.55 postpaid from Thinkmaker, Inc., 733 Third Avenue, New York, N.Y.

They can tap out a rhythm, do a kazatsky or a 180-degree split. As designed, soldier has a red coat with yellow buttons and yellow breeches. Punch has red stockings, lips, cheek. Costume, shoes are black, as are face outlines.

ILLUSTRATION FROM "THE ART OF CUISINE" (SEE PAGE 50)

A taste of this year's new cookbooks, selected from the annual harvest

By Kathleen Fredrick with Helen McCully

Aspiring French chefs will be interested to know that the classic encyclopedia of French cuisine, Henri-Paul Pellaprat's L'Art Moderne Cuisine, first published in 1935, has been translated into English. Entitled Modern French Culinary Art (World, $19.95 pre-Christmas price; $22.50 thereafter), this compendium contains well over 2,000 recipes, all of which have been prepared for American kitchens by Avanelle Day, coauthor with Lillian Stuckey of The Spice Cookbook. Every phase of French cooking—from Hot and Cold Hors d'Oeuvres to Sauces to Cakes and Pastries—has been covered completely. From the many appetizing recipes, we have picked two that reflect the flavor of the book.

Mushroom-Stuffed Tomatoes (Tomates à la Hussarde)

6 medium-large tomatoes
Salt
Freshly ground black pepper
½ cup chopped onions
2 tablespoons olive oil, salad oil, or butter
½ cup soft bread crumbs
1 cup chopped cooked ham
1½ cups finely chopped mushrooms
2 tablespoons chopped parsley
Parsley leaves

Wash tomatoes, cut into halves, and scoop out centers. (Save centers for soups, sauces, salads, etc.) Sprinkle inside of tomato shells with salt and pepper and drain them well. Cook onions in oil or butter, add bread crumbs, stir, and cook one minute. Add next three ingredients and salt and pepper to taste. Mix well and cook two to three minutes. Stuff into tomato shells. Sprinkle the top of each with a little oil. Arrange tomatoes in a large baking dish. Bake in a preheated moderate oven (350° F.) 30 minutes or only until tomatoes are hot through. Garnish each with a leaf of parsley. Makes six servings.

Frosted Lemons (Citrons Givrés)

6 large lemons
Angelica

Wash the lemons and cut a lengthwise slice from the side of each. Remove the pulp and juice and save for other cooking purposes. (If you are making the lemon ice, part of the juice may be used in it.) Fill the lemon shells with the hard-frozen lemon ice, and replace the lemon slices that were cut off the sides. Brush the outside of the lemon shells lightly with water. Store them in the freezer until ready to serve. Decorate with angelica. Makes six servings. (Mandarin oranges or regular oranges may be prepared in the same way.)

A unique volume that is part cookbook, part art treasury, and part treatise on 19th-century French life is The Art of Cuisine by Henri de Toulouse-Lautrec and Maurice Joyant (Holt, Rinehart & Winston, $15). Toulouse-Lautrec was a culinary artist and took pride in carefully planning menus. Very often he decorated his printed menus with sketches of memorable meals and diners. The two coauthors had been lifelong friends, and this volume is really a tribute to their friendship. After Toulouse-Lautrec's death, Maurice Joyant collected recipes that had been created either by his friend or in his company, embellished them with drawings by the artist, and published the result in a limited edition. A new edition of the original work has now been prepared, retaining the unique flavor of the original recipes with their colorful language.

Calf's Liver with Three Slabs
(Foie de Veau aux Trois Tranches)

Cut some slabs of bread as large as a hand, one centimeter (¼″) thick. Butter them lavishly and sprinkle them with pounded juniper berries. On each of them, put a slice of calf's liver of the same size; salt; pepper; sprinkle with juniper.

On top of the veal put a thin slice of bacon; sprinkle again with juniper and pepper.

Arrange the slices in an earthenware dish, put it into a very brisk oven for about 15 or 20 minutes, taking good care that the liver remains slightly rare to be creamy and melting.

Serve hot on the dish.

Valencian Arroz
(Arroz a la Valenciana)

Cook a large handful of string beans in water. When they are cooked, take them off the stove and keep the water in which they were cooked.

Strip the leaves off, and carefully clean three artichokes and cut the hearts into four pieces. Peel two or three large tomatoes and squeeze them to get the seeds out.

Open a half-liter (two cups) of cockles, a half-liter of mussels, and a liter of clams; keep the liquid from the shellfish.

Put some oil into a round cooking pot and brown well a chicken cut in pieces. When it is a good golden brown, take out the pieces and cook a large onion and a clove of garlic cut into very small pieces. Then throw in half a pound of rice, well washed and dried, and three times the volume of the rice in a liquid made up of the cooking water from the beans, the liquid from the shellfish, and completed with water if necessary. Salt and pepper; put in the chicken, the mussels, the cockles, the clams, and the artichokes, stirring it so that it is all well mixed.

Let it cook on a low flame without touching it or covering it. When there is no more liquid, it will all be done. You can add some sweet peppers according to your taste.

Author of The Art of Fine Baking and an occasional contributor to HOUSE BEAUTIFUL, Paula Peck has written another fine cookbook filled with outstanding recipes that she has collected, created, or adapted during years as a gourmet. The Art of Good Cooking (Simon & Schuster, $7.50) will be enthusiastically received by all cooks for the originality of its recipes and the warm, personal touch of the author in her comments on utensils, ingredients, and recipes. From the "Home Canning" chapter comes a recipe for:

Assorted Fruit in Madeira

This can be an assortment of any dried fruits: prunes, apricots, apples, pears, peaches, cherries, raisins, figs, currants, etc. Wash the fruits. Place in a large, clean crock, and add enough Madeira to cover. Let stand at least a week. Check crock every two or three days, and add more Madeira as the fruit absorbs the liquid. When the fruit is saturated with Madeira, it is ready to be packed into jars or crocks. The Madeira-soaked fruits may be used as a relish with almost any meat or fowl, or some of it can be chopped and added to a dressing for roast goose. It will keep indefinitely if care is taken that the fruit is always covered with Madeira.

Zucchini Stuffed With Tuna

- 4 medium zucchini
- 3 cloves garlic
- ⅔ cup olive oil
- 2 slices bread, soaked in water, then squeezed dry and crumbled
- 1 teaspoon pepper
- ⅔ cup chopped parsley
- 1 7-ounce can tuna fish, mashed up
- ½ pound small mushrooms
- 1 cup tomato purée or sauce
- Salt
- ½ cup stock

Cut zucchini into 2-inch pieces. Scoop out centers, using a small sharp knife or apple corer. Chop zucchini centers coarsely. Combine with garlic. Sauté in half of oil till soft. Mix with bread, pepper, half of parsley, and mashed tuna fish.

Sauté mushrooms in remaining oil till soft. Add tomato purée, a little salt and stock. Simmer 15 minutes.

Stuff zucchini shells with tuna fish combination. Place into tomato purée mixture. Bake in a 375° F. oven about 45 minutes, or until zucchini are very tender. Serve cold, sprinkled with remaining chopped parsley.

Serves six.

Baked Lamb and Potato Moussaka

- 3½ pounds shoulder of lamb, boned, trimmed of fat, and cut into ½" cubes
- ⅔ cup tomato purée
- 2 large onions, chopped
- 2 cloves garlic, minced
- 1 teaspoon basil
- 2 teaspoons salt
- Pepper to taste
- ½ cup chopped parsley
- 3 pounds potatoes, peeled, then cut into thin matchsticks
- ¼ cup olive oil

Combine all ingredients except potatoes and oil. Mix well with your hands, then place in a rather broad-surfaced casserole, preferably broader at the top than at the bottom. Press mixture down firmly. Arrange potatoes evenly on top of meat, and sprinkle potatoes with oil. Place the casserole in a 400° F. oven for about 1½ hours. Baste potatoes occasionally with meat juices from casserole. Potatoes should be very crisp when casserole is ready to eat. If this needs to be held over before serving, set oven to very low and leave casserole in oven.

The late Helen Evans Brown loved to cook and delighted many readers with quality cookbooks. In 1948, a limited edition of her Some Shrimp Recipes was published, followed a few years later by an equally small edition of Some Oyster Recipes. Both were sold out in a short time. Happily for those who never were able to get copies of these authoritative cookbooks, her husband, Philip S. Brown, has edited a new volume entitled Shrimp and Other Shellfish Recipes (Ward Ritchie Press, $3.95), containing their complete texts plus other material on shellfish from other writings by Helen Evans Brown. For gift-giving, this new book will be slipcased with two other of Mrs. Brown's classics, A Book of Appetizers and The Chafing Dish Cookbook, and will sell for $9.95.

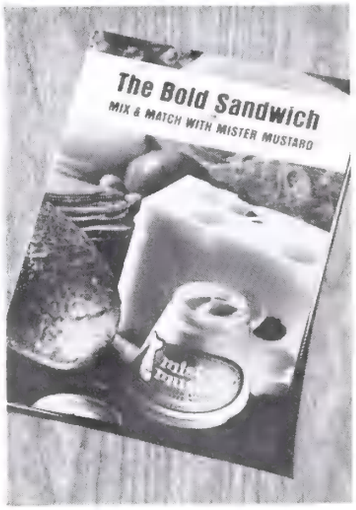
DOWN WITH TIMID SANDWICHES!



Read this shocking exposé that reveals the truth about the Common American Sandwich, tells how to protect your family's eating enthusiasm with the exciting flavor of Mister Mustard!

At last it can be told! "The Bold Sandwich", suppressed for years by namby-pamby tastes and unimaginative appetites, is now available to everyone.

This hard-hitting booklet lays bare the facts about the insidious Blandwich, the no-character sandwich that is bringing the American public to its culinary knees.

"The Bold Sandwich" unmasks ordinary mustard for the whole world to see. It shows how MISTER MUSTARD is replacing ordinary mustard in kitchens across the nation, so exciting is its Dijon taste.

But this searching work doesn't stop there. It goes on to describe in vivid detail NEW sandwich discoveries from around the world. Like the "Tower of Pizza" from Italy, or the "Copenhagen Canape" from Denmark. And many more, all made with the dazzling Dijon flavor of Mister Mustard.

Shrimp Bisque

This is a lovely soup, pale pink in color, satin-smooth, delightful. Here is a short-cut version, dispensing with the laborious pounding of shells, but losing nothing by the omission of that chore. Shell and clean 2 pounds of raw shrimps and grind them fine. Melt 4 tablespoons of butter, add ¼ cup of minced onion and the same amount of minced celery, and 2 tablespoons of grated carrot. Cook until the vegetables are wilted, add the shrimps, and cook 5 minutes, stirring carefully. Now combine with 3 cups of chicken stock and a sprig of thyme, and cook in the top of a double boiler for half an hour. Strain, pressing as much as possible of the pulp through the sieve, then add a cup of heavy cream and ½ cup of dry white wine. Rectify the seasoning, and serve with or without a topping of lightly salted whipped cream.

The big fish eat the little ones, the little ones eat the shrimps, and the shrimps are forced to eat mud.
—Chinese Proverb

Lobster Rumaki

Rumaki, the ever-popular Polynesian appetizer, is made with chicken livers ordinarily, but the basic idea is fine for all sorts of shellfish. Partially cook half-slices of bacon in the oven in order to render some of the fat. Slice boiled lobster-tail meat ¼ inch thick, dip in soy sauce, and sandwich each slice between two thin slices of water chestnut. Wrap each in a half-slice of bacon, and fasten with a toothpick. Broil in the stove or over charcoal until the bacon is crisp. Another way is to use a chunk of pineapple instead of the water chestnut slices.

To the Rhenish winehouse at the Steelyard, and there eat a couple of lobsters and some prawns, and pretty merry.
—S. Pepys, Diary, May 2, 1665

Creamed Scallops

This is a good chafing-dish entrée, fine for a late supper. Melt ¼ cup of butter (½ bar), add a pound of scallops—cut up, if very large—and cook for 2 minutes. Mix ½ cup of heavy cream with 3 egg yolks and add, along with a tablespoon of Sherry, a little salt, and a grating of nutmeg. Cook, stirring, until the sauce thickens, and serve on toasted English muffins.

And luscious scallops to allure the taste
Of rigid zealots to delicious fasts.

The owners of the over 100,000 copies of The New York Times Cook Book will probably be eagerly awaiting the delivery to their favorite bookstore of the companion volume The New York Times Menu Cook Book (Harper & Row, $7.50 through December 31; $8.95 thereafter). Food Editor Craig Claiborne has employed his same standard of excellence in this new book for culling the best of the recipes that appeared in The Times between 1960 and 1966. None of the recipes in this book appeared in the previous volume. The added treat here is that tempting menus have been planned with most of the recipes for the dishes included in the book. Here is a sample menu with recipes for three dishes.

Menu

Roast Veal with Lemon-Rice Stuffing*
Baked Acorn Squash*
Endive and Beet Salad
Banana Sour-Cream Pie*

Roast Veal with Lemon-Rice Stuffing (6 servings)

1 breast of veal (3 to 4 pounds), boned
Salt and freshly ground black pepper
1 teaspoon grated lemon rind
½ teaspoon dried basil
2 tablespoons butter
¼ cup finely chopped onion

¼ teaspoon ground ginger
2 cups cooked rice
⅓ cup raisins
1 garlic clove, finely minced
8 slices of bacon

1. Preheat oven to moderate (325°).
2. Spread the veal flat on a board. Season it with salt and pepper to taste, and the ginger.
3. Combine the rice, raisins, lemon rind, and basil. Melt the butter and sauté the onion and garlic until tender. Add to rice mixture.
4. Place the stuffing over half of the meat, fold over the other half, and sew together or skewer with food picks.
5. Put the meat in a shallow baking pan and cover with the bacon slices. Bake for 25 to 30 minutes per pound, or until meat is tender, about two hours.

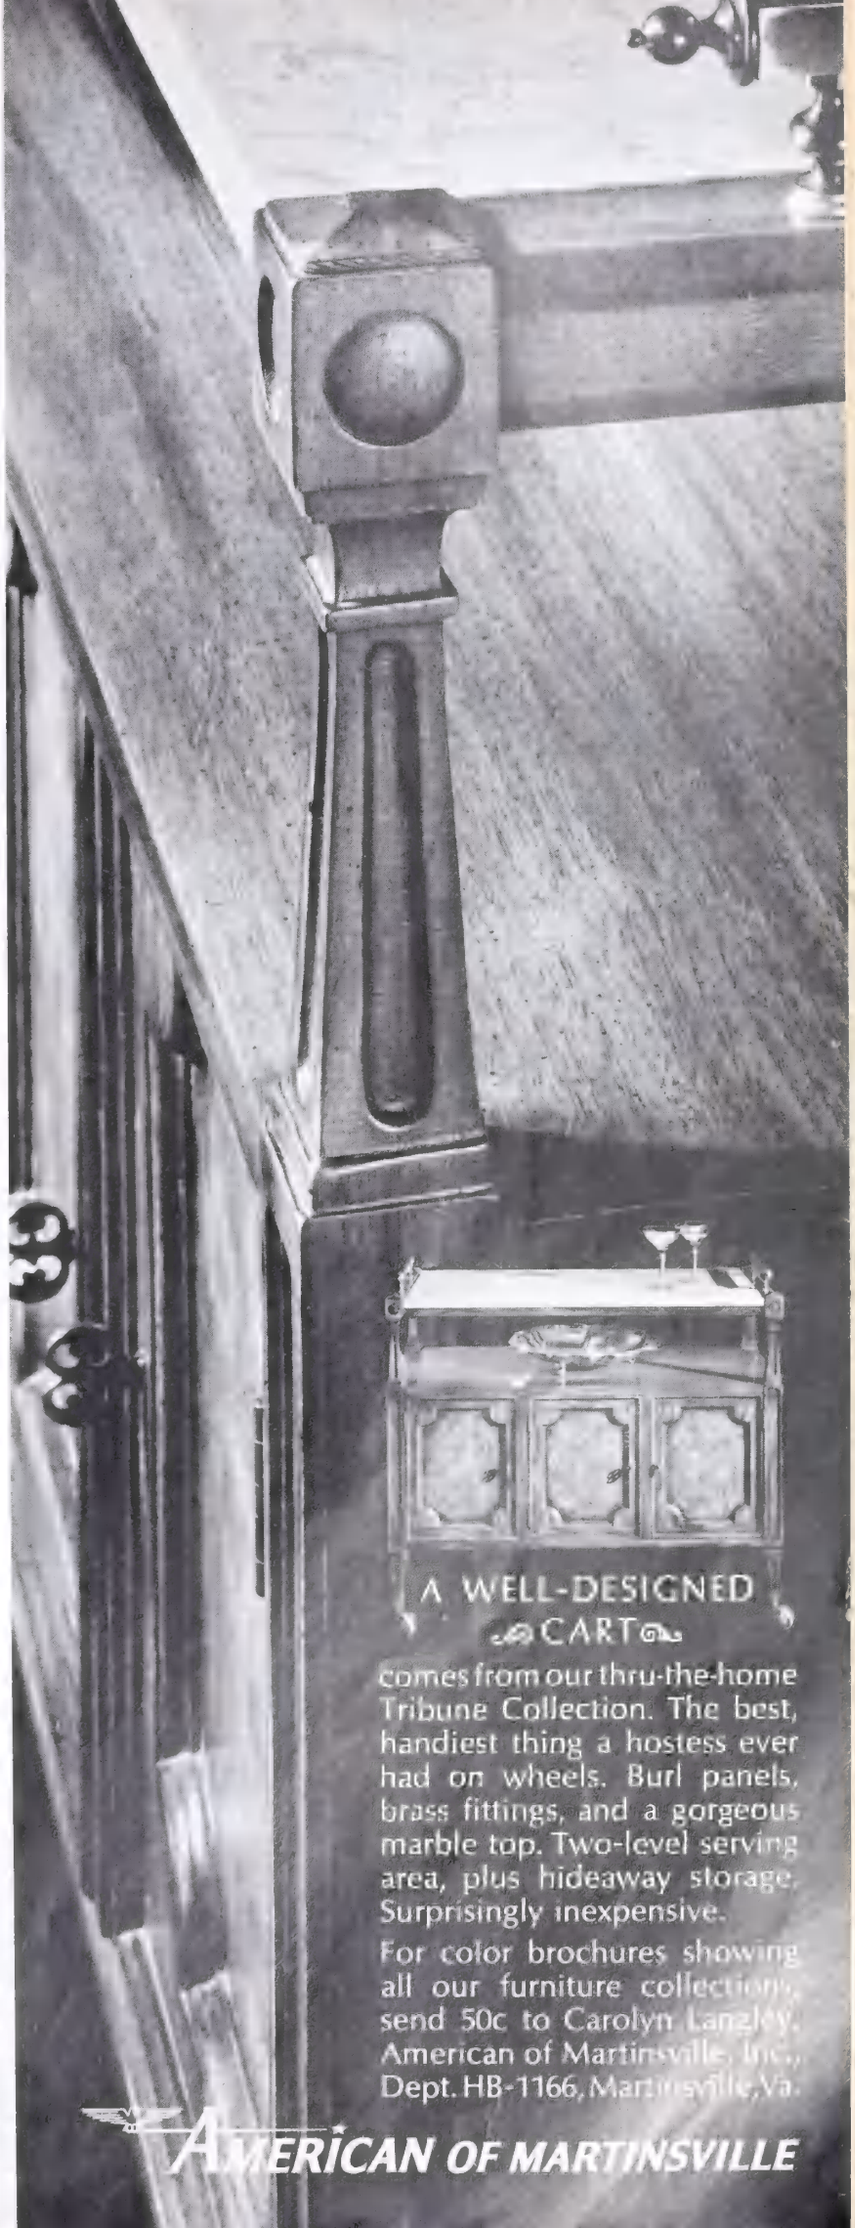
Baked Acorn Squash (6 servings)

3 acorn squash
Grated nutmeg or ground ginger
Salt and freshly ground black pepper
3 teaspoons brown sugar, or more
6 teaspoons butter
6 teaspoons sweet Sherry (optional)

1. Preheat oven to moderate (325°).
2. Split the squash into halves and scoop out the fibers and seeds.
3. Sprinkle the cavity of each half with nutmeg, salt, pepper, brown sugar, and a teaspoon of butter. Bake 30 to 45 minutes, or until flesh is tender. Five minutes before serving, add a teaspoon of Sherry to each cavity.

Banana Sour-Cream Pie (6 to 8 servings)

1½ cups sour cream
3 egg yolks
¾ cup sugar
2 tablespoons cornstarch
1 teaspoon vanilla extract
2 medium bananas
2 tablespoons lemon juice
Baked pie pastry, 9 inches



1. Put the sour cream into the top part of a double boiler and heat over boiling water until moderately hot. The cream will get thinner as it heats.
2. Beat the egg yolks lightly in a mixing bowl, and stir in the sugar and cornstarch. Gradually add the hot sour cream, stirring vigorously. Cook over boiling water for 15 to 20 minutes, until thick. Remove mixture from the heat, add the vanilla, and cool.
3. Peel and slice the bananas and sprinkle with the lemon juice. Put half of the bananas on the bottom of the baked pie shell and spoon half of the cold filling over them. Cover with the remaining bananas and then the remaining filling. Chill for several hours before serving.

For fish lovers (and we hope this includes a large segment of our readership), a new title of interest is The Savor of the Sea: A Complete Seafood Cookbook by Dan Morris and Matilda Moore (Macmillan, $6.95). Perhaps the greatest value of this book lies in the wealth of basic information about fish and shellfish: when and where to buy, proper care, cleaning, basics of cooking, preparations for outdoor cooking, and sauces. Recipes are categorized under headings of top of stove, broiler, and oven, and include hints on adapting recipes for different fish and shellfish. Drawings clarify many points. Instead of giving one sample recipe, we are giving two and include as well a few paragraphs from the chapter "The Basics of Cooking Fish."

Swordfish Steaks With Spinach and Shrimp

1 pkg. frozen chopped or leaf spinach, or 1 lb. fresh
Salt and pepper to taste
1 tablespoon lemon juice
4 swordfish steaks
¼ lb. small raw shrimp, shelled and deveined
¾ cup dry bread crumbs—or increase for very generous coating
6 tablespoons butter or margarine

(Please turn the page)

Prepare frozen spinach according to directions or cook fresh spinach. Drain it well. Pour ⅛ inch hot water into preheated broiler pan or preheated ovenware platter in which you can both broil and serve. Spread the spinach over the pan or platter. Season with salt, pepper, and lemon juice. Spread shrimp over spinach.

Lay the swordfish steaks on the shrimp, top with bread crumbs, and dot with butter. Broil under high heat 8 to 10 minutes or until fish flakes easily when tested with a fork. Serve from the ovenware dish. Serves 4.

Note: An aluminum-foil-lined broiler pan makes a satisfactory substitute for an ovenware cooking and serving platter. Fish, foil and all, can be transferred to serving platter.

Variation: Mix 2 tablespoons grated cheese with dry bread crumbs.

Red Snapper in Orange Sauce

2 lbs. red snapper steaks
3 tbs. orange juice
1 tbs. grated orange rind
5 tbs. butter or margarine, melted
1 tsp. lemon juice
Salt and pepper to taste
Dash nutmeg
Parsley

Place steaks in a single layer in a well-greased baking pan. Combine remaining ingredients, and pour over fish.

Bake in 350° F. oven 25 to 30 minutes or until fish flakes easily when tested with a fork.

Remove to a heated serving platter, pour any sauce remaining in pan over fish, and garnish with parsley. Serves 6.

How Long to Cook Fish

The most important thing to remember in fish cookery is that all fish and most shellfish are tender before they are cooked. The cooking process is not a tenderizing process, as it is with other foods, but a flavor developer and a coagulant. The flesh of the fish or shellfish loses its transparency in a short time when it is exposed to heat; the moment it turns opaque it is virtually done. Additional cooking only toughens and dries out the meat.

The proper direction for testing doneness in fish cookery is: "When the fish flakes easily at the touch of a fork, it is done." "Flaking easily" means that the flesh separates or falls easily into its natural divisions.

Always test in the thickest part, which will naturally take the longest time to cook. Don't gouge, but poke gently with your fork. If the first fish you test this way is full of tine marks, it will still taste much better than if you had overcooked it. But once you have done it a couple of times, no one will even suspect that you'd touched the fish.

A visual method of testing doneness is to check the translucent or transparent quality of the flesh. As we said above, it will change to an opaque or clouded color, usually white, cream, or pink, but will retain its moist appearance. The moment the meat looks dry or shrinks, it is overdone. Sauces should be prepared in advance so that the fish can be served the moment it is done. ■

BELGIAN LINEN

Your every day china can be so fine, most people will think it came from rich Aunt Hattie.

The trouble with the china that does come from rich Aunt Hattie is you hardly ever get to use it. It's so expensive, you're scared to death you'll break a plate. So you secret it away in some nook or cranny where nothing can happen to it, and look for something you can use.

We understand all that at Royal Doulton (we've been in the fine china business for a long time), so we've made a fine English china that looks good enough to be the china in the closet, but doesn't cost much more than plain old everyday dishes. It's called Royal Doulton English Translucent.

We have 25 patterns in all. They cost from $9.95 to $16.95 for a five-piece place setting. And you can tell from the one here, our $13.95 Tapestry, how fine a china it is. Every plate, cup and saucer is hand circled in pure gold.

We think it makes a beautiful second set of china. And if you decide to make it your one and only, we think it's fine enough for that too.

If you'd like to have our lovely brochure, so you can see all the Royal Doulton English Translucent patterns, send 10¢ to Doulton & Co., Inc. Dept. HB, 11 East 26th Street, New York, N.Y. 10010.

The people who built your dishwasher * recommend that you use something besides a detergent to prevent water spots.

They recommend:

LIQUID JET-DRY®

for dishwashers with automatic dispensers for JET-DRY

LIQUID JET-DRY causes glasses, silverware and china to shed water instantly after they are rinsed. No water drops are left on the dishes to dry into unsightly water spots. Dishwasher manufacturers, recognizing JET-DRY as the answer to water spotting, equip many models to inject LIQUID JET-DRY into the rinse water. If your dishwasher is so equipped, don't run out of JET-DRY. Even one dishwashing without JET-DRY can cause spots.

SOLID JET-DRY®

for dishwashers without dispensers for JET-DRY

SOLID JET DRY is now available for dishwashers not equipped to dispense LIQUID JET-DRY. It dries dishes just as spot-free and sparkling (and just as automatically) as LIQUID JET-DRY does in dishwashers equipped with automatic dispensers. SOLID JET-DRY comes in the form of a bar which is neatly encased in a plastic basket. You simply clip the basket to any corner of the upper rack of your dishwasher. Remember to buy JET-DRY. At grocery stores and dishwasher dealers.

* JET-DRY is recommended by the manufacturers of all 28 makes of dishwashers.

A roof is one of the most prominent features of a house. Installing a new roof can transform the house completely.

NEW FOR ROOFS

Man-made slate offers the thick, textured, fireproof qualities of natural slate—in six quarry-soft colors

A new slate roof can go on right over the deteriorated old roof. Beveled boards are used here to even the old shingle rows. A tough, waterproof butyl sheet is cemented along the lower roof edge to prevent entry of water that may be forced upward by formation of gutter ice dams in winter.

Entire roof is covered with a lapped layer of asphalt-asbestos felt, with a second layer under the first nine rows for added weather tightness. New slate, made of mineral fiber, weighs little more than half as much as quarried slate, but rivals its permanence.

The most expensive thing that ever happened to popcorn

Some people refer to Poppycock as the "millionaire's popcorn." And it is, rather. It's gold with butter. And studded solid with toasted almonds and southern pecans—each the size of the Hope diamond. Then this whole delicious melange is gathered together in a caramelized crunch so you can eat it in elegant chunks instead of (Heaven forbid!) by the ordinary handful. Come to think of it, it's really quite remarkable that we can sell this gorgeous confection for only 52 a can. You will find Poppycock mostly in fancier food and department stores.

POPPYCOCK CANDIES, VILLA PARK, ILL.

View from gable end of house shows how lapping of slates covers roof two slates thick, with slate triple thick where each row begins. Rows here are straight and uniform, but for pattern, shingles could be staggered, row width varied.

Close-up at ridge shows texture of the material. Each slate is ¼" thick and has jagged, sloped edges to emphasize shadow line and suggest stone. But these mineral-fiber slates are easier to cut, nail, and fit without breakage than stone, cost less to install.

Metal cap flashing where chimney joins roof is holdover from old roof. "Colorbestos Slates" used in this installation are manufactured by Johns-Manville and come in weathered shades of black, gray, green, buff, red, and purple, some of these colors scarce in natural stone.

Each book in this tiny library is a beautiful 24-page full-color miniature. They come in a "child-proof" bookcase, specially designed for hard wear, that is enclosed in a "see-through" carrying case with handles, so that the entire library can be toted to Grandmother's—or to school for "show and tell."

SHED POUND AFTER POUND QUICKLY AND EASILY

—THROUGH THE MAGIC OF "PUSH-BUTTON" SELF-HYPNOTISM!

HERE—FOR THE FIRST TIME—IS A SIMPLE, SAFE, SANE WAY TO REDUCE AND CONTROL YOUR WEIGHT!

YES, your weight problem is solved! an amazing method has been devised to rid your body of excess weight as no amount of pills, Turkish baths or starvation can. Called "Push-Button" Self-Hypnotism, this remarkable method helps your body use up excess fat—SO YOU LOSE WEIGHT WITHOUT MEDICATION OR EXERCISE!

And once you attain your normal weight, there's no diet to stop, no chance of gaining it all back again. You stay slim — naturally! It's as simple as that!

HOW TO REDUCE AND CONTROL YOUR WEIGHT THROUGH SELF-HYPNOTISM

This book gives you 3 simple "Push-Button" steps that enable you to achieve a deep state of self-hypnotism in a matter of seconds.

In this state you are able to give yourself a special suggestion that helps your body use up excess fat for the rest of the day!

In as little as one day you start to see results! And—because this is an automatic "Push-Button" process, you need no special abilities of any kind!

What this means to you is this: though you still eat and drink a wide variety of delicious foods and beverages — you never gain an ounce!

SIDNEY PETRIE, pictured at left, is a world famous hypnologist and consultant to doctors. He recently appeared on a CBS documentary on hypnotism, and has lectured widely to professional and lay audiences on the uses of hypnotism and autosuggestion. He perfected the remarkable technique of "Push-Button" Self-Hypnosis after 8 years of private practice involving difficult obesity cases referred to him by physicians and other medical specialists. For nearly 20 years, he has been helping thousands of people to master unwanted habits such as excessive drinking and speech defects. He is a member of the International Association of Hypnologists.

Robert B. Stone is a noted author with over 30 books to his credit. He received his B.Ss. degree from M.I.T.

THE MIRACLE YOU CAN PERFORM IN ONLY A FEW MINUTES A DAY!

It takes only a few minutes to perform the magic of "Push-Button" Self-Hypnotism. Yes, it's as simple as A-B-C.

That's why I say that in only one or two days you'll see:

- How to have youthful slenderness without strict dieting, exercise or heavy smoking!
- How to smoothe away aches and pains!
- How to relieve tensions and seemingly rejuvenate every muscle, gland and organ in your body!
- How to put new drive in your legs, new spring in your step!
- How to eat and drink practically anything under the sun without upset stomach or excess weight!
- How to resist colds, flu and respiratory troubles!
- How to restore muscle and skin tone, wipe away wrinkles! . . . and much, much more!

In less than a quarter of an hour you may start to perform a miracle in your life!

You will be more alive, more erect, more attractive to the opposite sex, able to do all that needs to be done during the day with energy and ambition to spare! You'll boast a splendid physique—and, though you eat all you like, you'll never gain weight!

AMAZING TECHNIQUE HAS HELPED THOUSANDS

For example, in this book you'll see how:

- Jean J. lost all her excess weight after pills, exercises and hospital care had failed. She says, "It has all the earmarks of a miracle."
- David O., a 47-year-old editor, writes: "Losing 10 pounds was like losing 10 years off my age."
- Rev. Charles W. lost 100 pounds easily!
- Wanda D. went from 320 to 135 pounds — has never once had to pass up a morsel of food!

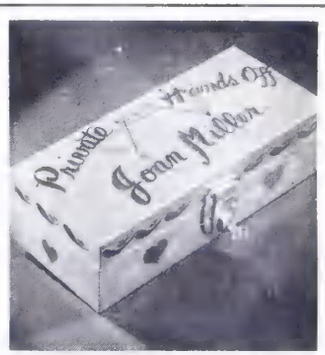
The Art of SCRIMSHAW

. . . developed on the rolling ships of old New Bedford has almost disappeared. Only a few men still follow in the footsteps of the seamen who painstakingly and with great delicacy engraved the ivory from the whales they caught.



Our work is done in this ancient tradition, on genuine ivory and entirely by hand.

The decoration on each piece we show is an old whaling ship. Mountings are heavily gold-plated. The ultimate gift for those you particularly wish to please.

We don't ask: "Which sofa do you like?" We do ask: "Which of these rooms makes you feel most at home?"

In most homes, the living room is just about everything...a haven from work-a-day cares, a retreat for husband-and-wife-talk, quiet reading, relaxed dining or even worrying about Junior's spelling. It's a stage when you entertain friends, a board room for family decisions. The more this room suits you and your family, reflects your tastes and personalities, the more you'll all feel "at home".

Since this whole room is most often planned around the sofa, you'll want to choose it with particular care.

At Ethan Allen stores, you see lots of sofas ..but never just sofas. You see sofas in beautiful rooms with coordinated American Traditional designs and accessories to give you an understanding of the total mood you want. No guess work. No need to imagine what's right. As part of our free Ethan Allen Decorating Service, we'll help you match anything you have in mind. Or dream up something new. Like a fresh way to use color or lighting...unique combinations of styles to help you achieve the right effect. The living room that has love and care lavished on it can't help but say "welcome".

There are over 100 sofa styles in Ethan Allen. Formal or informal. Young or worldly. Comfortable as they are beautiful. Hundreds of fabrics from which to choose. Along with our Ethan Allen sofas, you'll find over 2,000 designs of American Traditional furniture. All open stock. All "in style" forever.

See us soon. Mail the coupon for the name of your nearest Ethan Allen store and the 216-page Ethan Allen Treasury—a complete decorating course in itself. It shows you all 2,000 designs, room settings in color, decorating ideas, color schemes. Yours, from the people who know more about American Traditional...sell more American Traditional than anyone else!

I would like the 216-page Ethan Allen Treasury.

You won't trade this convertible in every three years.

This convertible is a KitchenAid dishwasher on wheels.

Like all the models in our line, it's built to last. We can't tell you exactly how long. But we know many of our 1949 models are still rolling along.

It's a convertible because it's convertible. You can use it as a portable dishwasher right now without any installation expense. And convert it to a built-in, whenever you'd like.

Here's what you get standard on this Superba model: Beautiful colors. (Coppertones, White or brand new Avocado Green.) A roomy interior (big enough for roasters, deep bowls.) Four push button cycles. A dependable, exclusive KitchenAid motor.

Plus a 4-Way Wash so effective you don't have to hand-rinse dishes at all. A separate drying system, safe even for fine china. And to top it off, a good top—a 1½" thick, hard maple cutting board.

So if you're in the market for a sharp convertible, wheel on down to your KitchenAid dealer (he's in the Yellow Pages). Or write KitchenAid Dishwashers, Department 6DB-11, The Hobart Manufacturing Company, Troy, Ohio 45373.

Drexel presents: Damask without Difficulty

Drexel knows that beauty stays unbothered when "SCOTCHGARD" Brand Stain Repeller is there to protect it. That spills, even oily ones, are of no concern. They simply blot away. And dirt's no problem, either. "SCOTCHGARD" Repeller helps fabrics stay clean and fresh. Hence, newer looking. The un-difficult damask here: a Tuxedo-tailored with cushions and pillows numbering six. Very inviting.

After we make the finest bone china possible, then we really get to work.

It's hard enough being perfectionists about our fine English bone china. But on top of that we've got 150 patterns to be finicky about.

So: to get the look of a hand-painted pattern, we paint it by hand.

Whenever we put gold on Wedgwood, it's pure gold. Burnished by hand. (It's even purer gold than your wedding ring.)

All gold rims are brushed on by hand.

For that matter, each and every pattern is applied by hand. Not just the intricate ones like these Florentines. We get just as involved with simple things.

The only man at Wedgwood who has an easy time of it is Mr. Meredith. His job is smashing. He throws Wedgwood rejects into a barrel to break them. So they can't ever end up in your home.

Now, that's easy. Especially since the rest of us work so hard, we don't have many rejects.

FRIGIDAIRE ANNOUNCES 7 NEW

HEALTH-SAVERS • FROWN-SAVERS

they're the all-new SUPER SURGE mobile dishwashers

3 convenient top-loading mobile models

Model DW-1TL, shown in Honey Beige. Also available in Snowcrest White.

4 convertible front-loading Dishmobiles

Model DW-CIML, shown in 2-tone Tahitian Green. Available in other colors.

7 new dishwashers, sized and priced to fit your needs and budget!

They're WORK-SAVERS because exclusive Super-Surge Washing Action in every model really scours dishes clean—literally drenches 'em in torrents of hot water.

WATER-SAVERS because they use less water in one automatic washing than you would doing dishes by hand three times a day.

HAND-SAVERS because you won't be up to your pretty red knuckles in harsh, soapy dishwashing water any more.

TIME-SAVERS because you just roll the dishwasher to the sink, load the dishes, hook it up, turn it on. No pre-rinsing at all.

HEALTH-SAVERS because the hotter water in a Super-Surge Dishwasher gets dishes a lot cleaner than hand washing. Nice for families!

FROWN-SAVERS because they carry our new, exclusive 5-year Warranty and Protection Plan: 1-year Warranty for repair of any defect without charge, plus a 4-year Protection Plan (parts only) for furnishing replacement for any defective part in motor, pump, or water circulating system.

The Corkette

A handsome gift for the man of discriminating taste — imported from England. The "Corkette" is designed to make opening wine bottles a pleasure — with an effortless, neat operation! You simply pierce the cork with the slender, hollow needle of the "Corkette" — pump the handle — and enough air is pushed into the bottle to "lift" the cork out easily! No damage to wine, bottle or cork . . . no bits of crumbled cork floating in wine glasses. "Corkette" is available in "wine" red, "azure" blue, "olive" green, "walnut" brown — with "mushroom" needle guard. And, "Corkette" has a free lifetime replacement guarantee!

$5.00 each + 25c postage and handling.

THE SECRET OF EASY, GOURMET COOKING

Authentic Oriental Wok

The secret of truly fabulous oriental cuisine lies within the 12" diameter of our hand-made, heavy steel Wok. The Wok is specially constructed to tender-cook meat or fish, yet keeps vegetables fresh and crisp. Just add a little oil to the bottom of the pan; as the food begins to brown, whisk it up the sides to complete cooking. Oil drains down, leaving only the succulent full flavor of gourmet cooking. Comes complete with ring stand, so cooking can be done on any flame burner—even Sterno. So easy—guests can cook their own!

A rare value at $7.98 postpaid including fabulous oriental recipes.

NOBODY EVER TELLS YOU THESE THINGS

From the kitchen of our food editor come helpful answers to some of the common but often puzzling questions in cookery

By HELEN McCULLY

Are cranberries available frozen? No. They're in the markets fresh at the moment, but you can build yourself a backlog of this merry fruit against the long lean months ahead by freezing them yourself. Just stick the box in your freezer. By the way, it must be a real freezing compartment maintaining zero temperature. Remember, in cooking cranberries, you cook them only until they pop. Cooked longer, they turn bitter.

What are tangelos? A good question right now because this might be called "Tangelo Month." In now, out the end of December. Tangelos look like oranges, but they are actually a hybrid, a cross between a sweet tangerine and a tart grapefruit. A perfectly delicious fruit.

What is a lady apple? Known in France as api (from Appicius, a Roman who obtained this type of apple by grafting), it is a small, red, strikingly beautiful apple, suitable for decorative purposes or as a dessert apple. It is grown to only a limited extent (you may have to hunt for it), and is usually available only this time of year at rather stiff prices.

How should you present pâté de foie gras? Unmold the chilled foie gras carefully from the can, place on a board, and slice with a warm or wet knife. Arrange the slices attractively on a bed of fresh, crisp lettuce, watercress, or port-flavored, chopped aspic. Place this dish on crushed ice to keep the foie gras cold. Serve with toast.

When do you add herbs to cooked vegetables? There's no hard-and-fast rule about this, but most food authorities suggest adding them, whether fresh or dried, after the vegetables are drained. There's a possibility that certain herbs cooked with the vegetables might give a bitter taste. In soups, stews, etc., the herbs are added at the beginning of the cooking. Fresh herbs should always be chopped fine, of course, to bring out all their volatile flavors.

Is it possible to get a good goose these days? Yes, but you have to be regular curmudgeon to get it, and here's why. Nobody tells you the best geese come from North Dakota and Wisconsin and that all geese available in the open market are frozen and, further, markets are inclined to deliver the goose without the original wrappings that have the name and address of the processor. Your only hope of a Cratchit-quality goose is to insist on knowing the source and insist on its being sold to you in the original wrapping. You thaw it out—don't let the market do it.

Why do chicken livers sometimes taste bitter? Because the green gall, which is extremely bitter, has not been removed as it should be.

Two Letters of the Alphabet... and You're a Master of Fine French Medoc.

Most of the world's finest clarets come from Medoc: light, always dry, a lovely red. How do you master the art of choosing a Medoc? Let two other fellows do it: Barton & Guestier. Their experts have been nosing around the French wine country for over 200 years. They've run the soil through their fingers. Know where the rain fell and the sun shone. So Barton & Guestier can bottle only the best wines of the best years. You save time worrying about it all, and spend it lingering over the wine itself. And that's the point, master!

What is eau de vie? In France, the skins and pits of the grapes left from the vintage are called marc, which is distilled to make eau de vie (water of life), a very fiery liquid. Alsace, Switzerland and the Black Forest specialize in producing an eau de vie from highly scented fruit. Kirsch is the eau de vie of cherries; fraise and framboise that of strawberries and raspberries respectively; mirabelle of little yellow plums, and quetsch of purple ones. The great one is the Swiss, Poire William, made from William pears. All eau de vie is colorless and generally used as a digestive after dinner, although sometimes the more flavorful are used to perfume fresh fruit.

What does "proof" mean in connection with spirits? It means the alcoholic content. If a Scotch whisky is 80 proof, it means that 40 percent of the contents in the bottle is alcohol. As a rule of thumb, you can figure that half or 50 percent of the proof is alcohol.

What size bowl should be used in beating eggs? If properly beaten, whole eggs will double in volume; egg whites will triple in volume; and egg yolks will about double. But you must think how the eggs are going to be used. If ingredients are to be added to the beaten eggs, you must take that into consideration in choosing the bowl. If beating one whole egg, one egg white, or one yolk, use the smallest bowl that will accommodate the beater.

Do you approve of the garlic press? With reservations—based on the fact that garlic when pushed through the little hand press is infinitely more pungent than when chopped, minced, or crushed. Cooks should use the press with caution, since one clove of garlic, pressed, with every bit of the volatile oil released, is the equivalent of three cloves of the same size, minced or chopped. Forewarned is forearmed.

How can you cut down the racket when beating something? Put a damp dishcloth under the bowl (not a sponge, it won't work), which not only eliminates much of the noise, but also keeps the bowl from bouncing around.

Is a cracker the same thing as a biscuit? What we in the U.S. call crackers, the English call biscuits—very thin, commercial or homemade wafers, plain or sweet. However, like us, the English call a dough of flour, baking powder, fat, and liquid, cut and baked, biscuits, too—our baking powder biscuits, for example. Cookies, as we know them, are sweet biscuits in England. Confused?

Why do you slash the fat on beef and ham steaks? Because the fat shrinks, curls up, and the meat won't lie flat when cooked.

Why are turkey legs often dry after roasting? The turkey is inclined to be dry by nature and the legs, which cook more quickly than the breast, dry out during the long roasting time unless protected. Many good cooks cover the entire bird with several layers of cheesecloth, well soaked in butter, basting right through the cheesecloth. This not only helps to keep the entire turkey moist, but also helps to brown it beautifully and evenly. ■

HOW TO CATCH AN EDELWEISS

By PEGGY THOMSON

E. A. HEINIGER

The craftiest siren since the mermaid—the edelweiss—was commemorated in The Sound of Music as "small and bright, clean and white." Anyone crooning such nonsense in Switzerland's Val Fex, the best edelweiss-picking patch there is, would probably be booted down the nearest mountainside.

Actually, the "noble white," as edelweiss translates, has been fooling people for years. The Swiss have helped by whittling and stitching luscious examples of it on every souvenir from hanky to humidor. But the fact is that the flower itself is about as impressive to the eye as a dandelion, to which, incidentally, it is said to be related. Its petals are sparse and ragged, suggesting that a goat may have chewed it or a tourist used it for a quick game of "loves me, loves me not." Its shade is tattletale, and it excels at deception.

The fun, of course, is in the hunt. Leontopodium alpinum is a splendid adversary and, as in anything worth the chase, the huntsman has his reward not only in the prize itself—captured in this case by the shores of a milky-blue glacial lake with the tooth-gnashing name of Sgrischus—but in the sunbaked forehead and the sense of well-being that comes of a day in the fine air. Besides, by the time the hunter has pressed his catch and mounted it on a bit of blue felt, he begins to think it looks, if not "clean and white," at least pretty good.

Despite what the books say, picking edelweiss is not against the law in Switzerland. Nor is it an experience reserved for Sherpa-caliber climbers. Anyone can do it. But edelweiss-picking doesn't mean buying the edelweiss in a cellophane packet at a railway kiosk, which is a possibility. Or snatching one from a wildflower preserve, where it is unlawful even to carry a botanical case or flower press. It means stalking the elusive flower oneself, where it blooms among chalky crags in the Fex.

The Fex is only one small dip in the Engadine, the high-lying valley in Switzerland's southeastern corner, which, although furrowed and fissured into more than 150 different valleys, is itself only some 60 miles long. With its white villages riding in swells of meadowland, the Engadine is where the Swiss go when they think thin blood and a pallor call for a change of air. And the Fex is where the Engadiners go when they think the same and want to look once more into the fuzzy yellow eye of their national flower.

Just about any Engadine village will serve as base camp for a day's jaunt in the Fex, and there is practically nothing to equipping and supplying the expedition. Only British walking clubs persist in striking out with icepicks along paths suited to the smooth passage of a baby carriage. If buying equipment bolsters the huntsman's spirit, he can concentrate on good shoes. The Swiss are rightly famous for these. Men setting heavy-cleated soles against cobbled pavement acquire a strengthened sense of masculine importance. And many women make the discovery that this footwear is not necessarily uncomfortable, though it does involve shedding all prejudice against looking like a lady wrestler in road training.

The really important piece of equipment is lunch. People staying at hotels have no problem, for most inns provide a stout survival kit, without taking into account that the traveler will be sustained as well by blueberry bushes and the wild strawberries.

The traveler on his own will find that making the round of shops for food is no hardship. In fact, by the time he has picked up his cheese and decided in the grocer's between the dark cherries and the waxy pears, and escaped from the bakery with only twice as much rye bread as he needs, and made his choice from the festoons of sausages at the butcher's, he will already have sampled a bouquet of Engadine aromas to which it would scarcely seem possible that the botanical world would have anything to add.

LUNCH in order, the huntsman should equip himself also with a pocket mystery book. It is a happy companion in any case, and, as something to press flowers in, it is quite as useful as a net for stalking butterflies. A real flower press is available in the bookstores and is a satisfactory contraption of blotting papers, boards, straps, and buckles. But a book will do and is rather a good ploy, implying that its well-traveled user is accustomed to gathering floral specimens and eschews new equipment.

Getting an early start can scarcely be avoided. When Baedecker came to the Engadine, he wrote about the deep stillness over all the valley, where he could hear, he said, neither birdsong nor the rustling of a leaf. One can only assume that the good man burrowed his head under his pillow through the early morning hours. Otherwise, he would surely have mentioned the riotous ringing of the churchbells at 5 A. M. It is enough to set the bluebells and edelweiss for miles quaking on their skinny stalks.

The Engadine weather has a few view-halloas of its own. Sometimes in summer such a heavy mist fills the valley that bedroom windows at daybreak are squares of pure white. Only during breakfast does a garden presently emerge from the sea of mist, wet and shining, followed by glittering roofs. By the time the traveler opens the door, the mist is still shredding, the last thin wisps whipping away to show the peaks.

He sets out, then, for the tiny village of Sils-Maria. It is from a knoll above Sils where the woods end and the valley of the Fex opens out above that the edelweiss hunt begins. Here at the very edge of the wood a cluster of giant firs stands sentinel over three large signs, posted like rules to the game. The largest says in great black letters that the use of automobiles in the Fex is interdit, verboten, prohibito, and not allowed. A small sign beside it warns that walking through the fields before the hay is cut is not allowed either. The third sign, which is the encouraging one, states that picking more than ten edelweiss or pulling them up by the roots will result in a fine.

So it is that the Fex is approached along a road that winds in lazy curves beside open fields and past clusters of buildings, through land that seems to curve no more steeply than the rim of a saucer. The Fex is snug as an eiderdown-padded cradle—the valley itself so shallow, the turf so green and springy, the stream so merry, the houses so inviting—it is all prettiness, where the rest of the Engadine is of sterner stuff. The Fex fields are spangled with flowers like a milky way. Window boxes spill over with yellow and orange asters hanging in streamers against the white walls. Scarlet geraniums blaze from cauldrons on pebbled terraces. And anyone who inquires about the edelweiss will be told that here this spindly flower grows as big as a five-franc piece or an American silver dollar.

A hotel at the head of the valley is the stopping point for the omnibus trip and the starting point for innumerable hikes to peaks and passes. Here the passengers establish forward camp at the parasol-shaded tables on the terrace, and spread out lunch.

After lunch, getting the lay of the land preparatory to the ascent is easy. The person wanting a truly memorable edelweiss hunt strikes out from the tangle of paths on the one threading up to Piz Chuern. This lands him at Lej Sgrischus (literally, the dreadful), which at 9,000 feet has the highest lake trout in Switzerland—and edelweiss. The signpost lists it as a two-hour walk, but the kindest interpretation to be put on the Swiss custom of labeling things is that they are unblinking flatterers. One accepts the compliments and doubles the time.

If Chuern is a bit too challenging, or if lunch was prolonged, one can follow the waitresses' advice and head up the steep grassy embankment directly above the hotel. There some of the very best specimens are to be found. The prize itself is just three-quarters of an hour's scramble away, among the rocks and crags jutting out from the grass.

This is where a word of caution is in order, not regarding the tooting, which goes without saying, but expectations. Other wildflowers have a way of standing out against the turf, but the edelweiss doesn't play it that way. Its instincts are all perverse. And it won't be caught silhouetted against anything until it's a color-plate in a book or done up on contrasting felt.

When one sees an edelweiss fresh abloom, chances are that it's in a state of disarray which would scarcely seem possible considering its limited number of petals and that it's not in a bunch at all but scattered meagerly across a field of high grass or holding a crooked pose with its greenish-white flowers and whitish-green leaves in front of some pretty dingy-looking rocks to match. Not the least of its tricks is that it also has a host of accomplices posted all about it for the sheer comedy, it would seem, of watching people pounce in triumph and come up with a daisy.

Putting them in a hatband, by the way, is considered corny. The accepted procedure is to tuck each specimen in the book. The flowers are tough as the felt they resemble, and a rumpled job can be corrected later.

There's not really much to this part of it. Anyone knows what picking flowers is like. But the tunnelings of marmots, and the loose stones underfoot plus the rumored presence of snakes do lend a certain sense of insecurity, and coming down again, as many a novice climber has found after congratulating himself on a positively mountain-goat ascent, is a knee-jarring business.

The sensation of success plus the omnibus ride down again from the Fex help to restore the huntsman's knees. Persistent cases of shakiness, though, are cured with a sidetrip into a Weinstube for anything from a thin beer to the famous Kirsch or a visit to a konditorei for a comforting sample of Engadine tortes.

Spirits revived, the traveler makes his way back down the valley at almost the nicest time of day. The Engadine is blessed with a long twilight, when the sky is bleached to the thinnest of blues, the houses and high snow fields turn pearly and the mountains are softened by long shadows.

The scarcity of an audience has always been a hunter's hazard. And the edelweiss hunter is no exception. Comfortably settled once again in the Stube with his back to the warm ceramic oven and his trophies spread out on the table before him, he will have to snatch what satisfaction he can from his day's catch. The Engadiners' attitude is a curious mixture of pride and indifference.

Chances are that a Swiss, instead of complimenting the foreigner on his edelweiss catch, will hold up for his admiration a handful of limp little red-brown tufts known as mannertreu, which give off an absolutely soul-stirring whiff of vanilla. Never mind. Just wait, you can say, till next year. ■

PUT THE RIGHT PLANTS IN THE RIGHT PLACE

Further thoughts on the never-ending quest for gardens that do full justice to the plants therein

By ELSIE LOUISE SCULTHORP, Landscape Architect

Perhaps the most perplexing of all gardening problems is finding the places where the plants you want will look at home and be at home. As an aid to following this worthy direction, there are three words that should rank high in the gardener's vocabulary—appropriateness, simplicity, and restraint.

A feeling for the fitness of things—another way of saying appropriateness or good taste—is not a gift possessed by everyone, but it can be learned. Start with the thought that the impression one gets from the total planting is of more importance than the specific plants that are used. The plants, of course, must be right for the conditions. But each plant, each packet of seeds, should be chosen with a definite location and a definite effect in mind. In her delightful book, Color Schemes for the Flower Garden, Gertrude Jekyll had this to say on the subject of taste:

"It is just in the way it is done that lies the whole difference between commonplace gardening and gardening that may rightly claim to rank as a fine art. Given the same space of ground and the same material, either they may be fashioned into a dream of beauty, a place of perfect rest and refreshment of mind and body—a series of soul-satisfying pictures—a treasure of well-set jewels; or they may be so misused that everything is jarring and displeasing. To learn how to perceive the difference is to apprehend gardening as a fine art. In practice it is to place every plant of a group of plants with such thoughtful care and definite intention that they shall form a part of a handsome whole—it is to be always watching, noting, and doing, and putting oneself, meanwhile, into close acquaintance and sympathy with the growing things. . . .

"It is just this quality and singleness or simplicity of aim that I find wanting in gardens in general, where one may see quantities of the best plants grandly grown and yet no garden pictures."

Flowers are of the most importance, both in the garden and in the general landscape. They are the most delightful and decorative single element we can have in the garden. Masses of lovely color, well placed and well harmonized, will give us endless pleasure. Anyone can have color, but to have it thoughtfully planned and properly placed is another matter. Too often we are tempted to buy anything that appeals to us and plant it wherever we can find room. This may give us a collection of interesting and beautiful plants, but we won't have a beautiful garden. This is where restraint comes in. We must choose our plants wisely and with a definite purpose in mind.

Know your plants

When we do choose, there are a number of things to keep in mind. We should know height, season of bloom, color, and size of flowers. We should know how the leaves and blossoms are borne on the plant. We should know its hardiness, the color and texture of the foliage, and the soil requirements. Is the plant long- or short-lived, is it spreading or self-contained?

This information is not so forbidding as it may seem at first. It's all readily available in garden encyclopedias, and most of it, in fact, is in the garden catalogs.

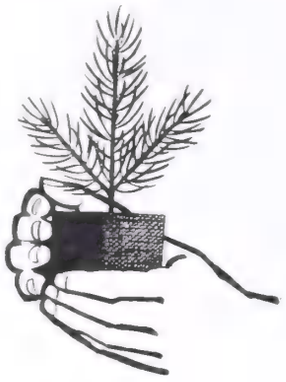
Those of us whose homes are on small plots of ground—where we can see all our own boundaries—have a limited space within which to get the effect we want. Here, again, is Miss Jekyll on the subject of such plantings:

"Bring to bear on the subject common sense with sincerity of purpose, sense of beauty, an artistic knowledge that can make plain ground and growing things into a succession of living pictures. Common sense I put first, because it restrains from any sort of folly or sham or affectation."

This, it seems to me, is the very epitome of gardening. It tells us, for instance, that we shouldn't plant orchids on sand dunes—but we need more than common sense. We need knowledge of plants, an understanding of the problem, the urge to solve it, and the judgment to know when this has been accomplished.

This is particularly applicable when the garden is small and the eye can see it all easily at a glance. In such a garden we should select plants charming or interesting in themselves, both in and out of bloom, and with form and character; and, if possible, plants with a long flowering period.

Keep it simple



And, in a garden of any size, it is best to plant freely and boldly in colorful masses rather than divide the space into small beds; and use an occasional accent of color, size, or form for emphasis where needed and to avoid monotony. Keep the whole as simple as possible.

If there is a distant view, the masses of color should be large enough to count, but not so large or bright as to distract the eye from the outlook. Or, perhaps, if the view is not particularly striking, one might plant a really bright colorful scenic foreground so the eye will find interest there.

Whatever you plant, whether it be a bright and brilliant splash of color or drifts of more restful soft colors and foliage masses, the whole should have a graceful, artless look reminiscent of the way the plants grow in nature.

And this, in the final analysis, is the place to look for appropriateness, simplicity, and restraint. Look to the plants in field and forest, and to the wildflowers among the rocks and in the mountain meadows. See how the pines and beach grass grow on the dunes along the sea, and how the native plants range themselves along a stream and in the marshy places. These effects are not to be duplicated; however there's much to learn from nature's unerring way with line, mass, color, and texture—and there's no more rewarding environ in which to study.

When the study and appreciation is done, the work begins. It takes loving care and sustained effort to make a really good garden, no matter how natural it may seem. Rudyard Kipling said it very well: "Gardens are not made by singing: 'Oh, how beautiful' and sitting in the shade." ■

How to leave home and like it BY MARION GOUGH

A NICE PLACE TO VISIT

Nostalgic and newsworthy notes about a few well-visited places that have become perennial favorites

There was a time when an evening with George and Martha meant conversation and late supper at Mount Vernon. In fact, so much entertaining went on at the Washington estate that the proprietor once noted in his diary that he and his lady had not sat down alone to dinner in 20 years. So when Mrs. Jacqueline Kennedy made the place the scene of an inspired gala a few years ago, she was evoking lovely shadows of the past when the open-handed welcome of the house represented the hospitality of the young country. Dignitaries from abroad wrote home enthusiastic reports of the beauty of this riverside site, the perfection of its gardens with their "clever" plants and trees collected from the world at large, and the pleasing quality of its accommodations. Never mind that they frequently expressed the unflattering surprise that an American host could put on such a good show. We learn that dinner was at three (one highly protein menu included leg of lamb, a small pig, roasted fowls, beef, peas, lettuce, cucumbers, artichokes, tarts, and puddings); tea was at six; and supper, referred to as elegant, was at nine. Wine flowed throughout, the Father of our Country enjoying a sensitive palate for Madeira. Overnight or long-term guests were bedded down and luxuriously canopied in four-poster beds.

ADDRESS BOOK

Valuable names and places—for unique services—from our little black book to yours

By EPSIE KINARD

Do you have in your little black book a list of unusual services for spreading Christmas largesse out over the other eleven months?" many readers ask at this time of the year.

To a lucky someone's kitchen every month, one shop will send straight from the ship's hold the rare coffees that are grown on the lush flanks of the cloud-tipped Kilimanjaro; on the terraced plantations of Malaya; on the green-clad coastal ranges along the Indian Ocean. Packed in picturesque, rope-tied burlap bags, S. & L. Honey Center, 1016 Lexington Ave., New York City, will ship a minimum of two pounds of coffee for $3.50 in the bean or in one of three grinds. You can choose from Mocha from Yemen; Mocha blended with java from Malaya; Cobans from Guatamala; Medellin from Columbia; Bourbon Santos and demi-tasse coffees from Brazil; others from Kenya, Mexico, and Costa Rica. Add 50 cents for shipments east of the Mississippi, $1 for shipments west.

At a shop where a merry, milling crowd from all over the world comes to taste slivers of the unusual, the picturesque, and the delectable cheeses they buy, such excitement seems to spill over into the 1½- to 2-pound packages that Cheese-of-All-Nations, 153 Chambers Street, New York City, sends far and near. You can order round-the-calendar gifts of cheese on a 12-, 9-, 6-, or 3-month plan. The recipient will unpack connoisseur choices ranging from a red-coated, foil-wrapped Farmer cheese from Holland's grassy pasturelands to the fabulous LaGrappe from Savoie, massed as densely as caviar with black beads of skins, stalks, and seeds. For details on cheeses and monthly plan rates, send for free catalog.

Golden caviar from the Caspian Sea that once only the czars of Russia and the shahs of Isfahan could smack their lips over will be flown, packed in ice, anywhere at a date requested by the recipient. This way, the gift can be timed to arrive for some gala occasion. Like any monarch worthy of the name, this king of foods has its own throne: a Baccarat crystal server that arrives for Christmas in a festive wrapping. Caviar plus dish cost $130. From Neiman Marcus, Dallas, Texas.

Filling the empty void of a favorite child in boarding school is no longer so simple a routine as packing a box of homemade brownies and cookies. Whether for midnight dorm feasts, for study-hour munching, or for use to bribe or barter, youngsters like to get sophisticated food boxes packed and mailed by gourmet gift specialists. Guided by a poll taken of Eastern seaboard prep schools as to what they like to get, AcHar, 420 Lexington Avenue, New York City, in cooperation with fancy-food supplier, Charles & Company, sends out monthly school packages. Varying from month to month, the contents include fresh fruit, dried fruit, cheese spreads, soft-drink mixes, cookies, and condiments. The price of a January-to-June monthly delivery plan is $35; for eight school months $53.50; for a single package, $7.50, postpaid. ■

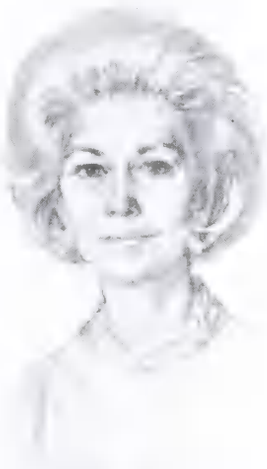
WHEN COMPANY COMES... some splendid things are apt to happen at home. It is our intent in this issue to show houses with company at the threshold in a full sweep of Hospitality—Southern . . . Western . . . Eastern . . . American—from Dinner at Nine in the Capital to an uproarious birthday party for eight little girls in the Connecticut countryside. Vermeil and Waterford Chandeliers or Crepe Paper and Balloons, the impulse to have people enjoy a lovely, gay, memorable time at home is the same.



We thought you'd like us to take hospitality beyond the table setting and the menu . . . to The Entertaining House. To the guest room (have you ever slept in your own?) and its fittings; to little guest houses which, in a special way, are the ultimate hospitality; to parking extra cars. And, in the midst of all these pages dedicated to getting ready for the holidays and finding compound-interest Christmas Gifts (to make and/or send for), don't be surprised to come across a flowering of spring blossoms, bulbs that must be tucked into the ground now. It's a glorious, busy, gracious, expectant, shining season for your home, and we hope this issue will help light the candles.

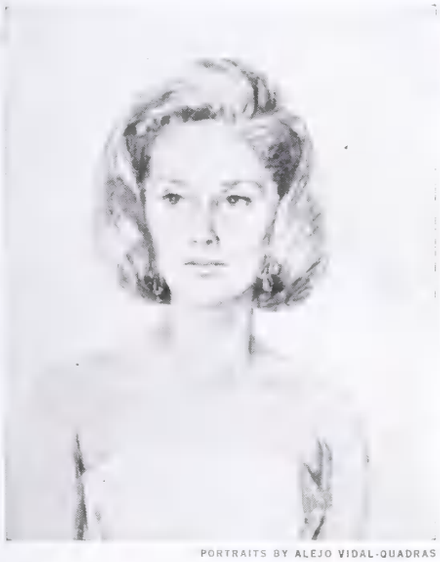
THREE GENERATIONS OF

By MARION GOUGH

It is a moot question whether great hostesses are born or made. But these eight pages speak as convincingly for heredity as for environment. The hospitable tables shown were set by three gifted hostesses who also represent three generations of the same family. As for environment, this unusual trio presides over their own households in Washington, D.C., where they were born, bred, and oriented to the capital city's rigorous genre of entertaining. Mrs. Garfield Kass and her daughter, Mrs. Irving Berger, are acknowledged artist-engineers of memorable fêtes and galas. Mrs. John Mason, the youngest hostess in the family and a bride of a year, is clearly endowed with the same gift for turning welcome to enchantment.



Mrs. Garfield Kass is a collector with an uncompromising sense of quality which is also reflected in the tastes of her daughter and granddaughter. Her townhouse is Palladian in character, set against the boskiness of Rock Creek Park. Her preference is for 18th-century English and pastel color—yet she and her husband are collectors of modern art, and her bedroom is done in vibrant Thai silk, acquired on their latest trip to the East.

PORTRAITS BY ALEJO VIDAL-QUADRAS

Mrs. Irving Berger, a knowledgeable amateur of French neoclassicism, has given her house the air of a Directoire manor, surrounding it with formal evergreens and topiary. Once the Australian embassy, the house was remodeled by James Amster, who has become designer-decorator to all three generations of this design-conscious family. Inside, the house is a charm of museum-worthy boiserie and furniture, much of it Louis XV, every working object a treasure of its kind. Mrs. Berger collects opaline, Bristol glass, and French porcelain, perennially looking out for linens and accessories to enhance table settings.

Mrs. John Mason, nee Cathy Berger, presides, young-married style, over a three-room apartment which gives evidence of an inherited interest in things French and a personal appreciation of Biedermeier, which she is starting to collect. All three ladies have a concern for fine food, but Mrs. Mason, having put in a year at Mme. Vaudable's Académie in Paris, has become an enthusiastic gourmet-cook, under the tuition of the Countess de Toulouse-Lautrec.

THE FLATTERING PERFECTIONIST

Mrs. Garfield Kass sets the family pace. Perfectionism—that flattering evidence that nothing is too much effort for a guest's enjoyment—marks her entertaining, whether it's a dinner for a diplomat in the full panoply of Irish crystal, vermeil, and Point de Venise, or a little luncheon on the terrace, which borrows as background the treetops of Rock Creek Park. Dinner in the Chippendale dining room is lighted by true candlelight from the great Waterford chandelier as well as from twin heirloom candelabra. There is the unexpected enchantment of gold played against silver, the surprise of antique flatware mixed with this century's Tiffany. Rockingham place plates belong to a vast service originally made for the court of Thailand, much of which is also used as wall decoration in this pale-cream room. Terrace luncheon, right, is yet another charming, unexpected medley—Royal Worcester china with an embroidered printed cloth from North Africa. Williamsburg goblets, souvenir plates commemorating a Lincoln centennial, Thai brass flatware, and ruby glass accessories. More ►

THE ELEGANT NON-CONFORMIST

Mrs. Irving Berger calls herself a conformist—but no hidebound conformist could have massed with such effective abandon the orange-gold and red bouquet on the luncheon table opposite. Indeed, no conformist would have chosen the stunning Porthault printed cloth from which the flower colors were stolen, nor turned rock candy to adornment, piled in a Bristol girandole. Sterling here is Tiffany; crystal is Baccarat. Only a sure and elegantly nonconforming hand could set an apéritif table in the poolside loggia and make a splendid silver-and-teak Indian fish platter seem as authentic on the neoclassic scene as Directoire sphinxes and topiary boxwood. The garden, reflected in the mirrored wall of the loggia, embraces the pool, is evergreen, its only flowers white ones because they "light" best at night, and can be enjoyed from the dining room and gallery, which overlook the pool. Dinner setting at right, also shown on our cover, is laid on a Madeira cloth embroidered to Mrs. Berger's design, its wreath pattern taken from the damask wallcovering. More ►

A transverse hall, left, slashes brilliantly through the Berger house, separating the drawing room on the front of the house from the dining room that overlooks the back garden and pool. The marble hall, furnished in 18th-century Venetian benches and hung with four great Vernets, terminates in the morning room, a livable repository of 18th-century French sitting-room pieces, its color scheme a surprising pink, rose, and brown. The glass cabinet displays the pink-and-gold antique porcelain used for the grandest of dinners. The room is often used for the Bergers' strictly adhered-to 60-minutes-only cocktail hour preceding dinner parties. Larger groups assemble in the drawing room, above, which is paneled in Louis XV boiserie. A true daughter of her mother, Mrs. Berger "does" her own flowers, preferably a day ahead of time. Mrs. Berger prefers sit-down luncheons or dinners in the dining room, which can accommodate 14 at the normal table, or five small tables of eight.

THE SLEIGHT-OF-HAND ARTIST

Mrs. John Mason, a daughter of the times as well as the inheritor of grand-manner tastes, entertains charmingly in her living-dining room, restricting sit-down dinner guests to two, buffet suppers to eight. A Gallic menu of her own execution in a tiny kitchen, behind a folding door, features pâté, filet ragout, peppers vinaigrette, and a torte served forth on wedding-present finery, to the sparkle of her Tiffany crystal and "Provincial" sterling. Having been exposed to grand-manner entertaining all her life, she realizes that a less formal approach is the happiest for her in small servantless quarters. Accessories here were chosen to give the table a look of the provincial. Curtained Biedermeier cabinet stores tableware.

EXTEMPORANEOUS NEEDLEWORK

All the work on these pages was done by nonprofessionals—nonprofessional embroiderers, that is. Photographers, writers, interior designers. CONFESSIONS OF A NEEDLEPOINTER

In North Africa, a man working with wool and needle is a commonplace. Here, an American who has put needle to canvas for over 15 years explains the special pleasure of his handcraft

By RUSSELL LYNES

Several years ago I was on my way by jet to Istanbul with my wife, and sitting behind us was a woman with a leg in a cast and crutches at her side. We had got into conversation soon after the plane took off over how to stow her crutches and dispose comfortably of her plaster leg, and because I wanted to know if she minded if I smoked my pipe. She could not have been more amiable, and I sat for quite a while smoking and reading a book which finally became tiresome. I had my needlepoint in my briefcase, so I took it out and set to work.

I think that had the plane been full I would have been reticent about doing needlepoint; it makes people stare when a man does it, and I do not like being stared at. But the plane was only about a third full, and half of that third seemed to be buried in magazines or asleep and, anyway, I was far forward in the cabin and not on anybody's main route to anywhere.

After I had been at it for a while, I got up to stretch my legs, and the woman leaned over and said to my wife, "Does your husband often help you with your needlepoint?"

My wife, who commits herself to any form of handicraft only in moments of desperate boredom, replied, "Heavens no. It's not mine; it's his!"

It was more than fifteen years ago that I started to do needlepoint, and I am sometimes appalled to consider what my investment in time, in wool, in thought, in canvas, and in patience has been during those years of millions upon millions (literally) of stitches.* I am quite sure, however, that whatever the investment has been, it was a wise one. The fact that there are more framed needlepoints, more needlepoint pillows and chair seats, and more odd pieces stored in closets in my house than any reasonable housekeeper wants to put up with is secondary to what they have contributed to my temperament and consequently to the nervous systems of those about me.

No man who does needlepoint is, I suspect, entirely unself-conscious about engaging in a branch of what a century ago was called "fancy work." I am no exception, and I am used to being asked, "How did you ever get started doing that?" by men, women, and children old enough to have stopped playing with blocks. And since, if you have stayed with me this long, you are probably wondering too, I will tell you, and you will see that there is some logic in my explanation.

In about 1946 I was ordered by my physician to eat nothing that had any taste or texture and to engage in none of the occupations that I considered to be work. I was told to go to the country for a month, drink milk, contemplate the landscape, and not brood. Since I read as a profession (I am an editor), I decided that reading—even detective stories—was work. In the barn in the country, I found a box of oil colors, brushes, a palette, and a roll of unstretched canvas, the residue of a course I had taken when I was an undergraduate at Yale. (It was called "Still-life Painting," met for three hours one afternoon a week, and, surprisingly, we got credit for it—surely on the basis of effort, not accomplishment.) I decided to take up painting again, and in the ensuing several years I became a Class D Sunday painter, which I enjoyed except for fury at my ineptitude and the amount of time it took to set up and, when I was through for the day, to clean up.

Then one evening my daughter, who was about twelve, brought home from school a small bit of tapestry canvas and some wools; she was trying to do a flower in needlepoint and was having trouble. I said I'd be glad to see if I could help her figure out how it worked, and found myself fascinated by what seemed a stitch simple enough for even me to understand. After several evenings of putting in and ripping out, we had something that vaguely resembled an anemone about three inches square. Not long after that, Steinberg, the great cartoonist, was at our house and I showed him the little piece.

*In a piece of gros point ten inches square on the canvas I customarily use, there are roughly 10,000 stitches.

"If you'll do a chair seat," he said, "I'll draw one for you."

We took a seat out of a mahogany chair, traced around it for size and shape, and a few days later Steinberg sent me a drawing of a decorous nude standing beside a table on which was a vase of flowers.

I've done no Sunday painting since. Here was a chance to work with design and color, to be as slavish or as inventive as one wanted to be on something that could be picked up for a few minutes or a few hours, that was not a hindrance to conversation. It left no mess to be cleaned up, no brushes to wash or easel to put away, and furthermore it produced objects which might be useful—something that surely could not be said for my paintings.

There are many kinds of needlepointers, and I am several of them. Many kinds I am not, however, since I am not clever enough in the manipulation of a needle to venture beyond the restrictions of petit point or gros point, and to spare my eyes I do as little of the former as possible. (I once asked a woman who was working on a piece of petit point about big enough for a handbag how long she had been working on it. She gazed at the ceiling in thought for a moment and replied, "Oh, about thirteen years.") I have never worked a piece so large that it was necessary to do it in sections and sew them together (my largest is about a yard square), and I do not work on a frame. Sometimes I work from other people's designs (as in the case of the Steinberg), which I transfer to the canvas; sometimes I design my own in advance, and sometimes I make up designs as I go along. I have never bought a canvas with a design printed or painted on it, and I do not profess to understand the people who buy needlework on which all of the interesting part has been done by professionals and there is nothing left for them but dreary, endless, monochrome background to fill in. I am aware that this means that I do not understand at least half of those who put needle and wool to canvas.

It would be ridiculous of me to write in more than a cursory way about the methods I employ; they are primitive, though the effect they achieve sometimes surprises me by looking sophisticated in comparison with the results of much, indeed most, needlepoint that one sees. This sophistication (if that's what it is) has nothing really to do with technique at all; it has to do with basic concepts of what is suitable use of wool (whose subtleties are infinite), with the treatment of a flat surface, with the rather coarse quality of the drawing it is possible to render in gros point, and with experimentation. But let us skip the abstract, and let me be briefly specific about a few things that I have learned to do.

By way of credentials I should, perhaps, say that the only time a piece of my needlepoint was exhibited in the amateur needlepoint show (for the benefit of the Lighthouse for the Blind) in New York, it won first prize in the men's division. It was a peacock done in a technique that so far as I know I invented, though I almost surely didn't. (Techniques almost always evolve; they are rarely invented.) The peacock was originally drawn for me by the painter Bernard Perlin, in colored crayons, an intentionally flat and schematized bird of brilliant body and plumage. It was a drawing about 18 inches square. I had it photostated up to about 30 inches and then traced the principal outlines through the canvas with a soft pencil and then firmed the lines with a brush and (Please turn to page 294)

Now's the time, before winter sets in, to plant bulbs for next spring's bloom.

THE MAJOR ROLE OF THE MINOR BULBS

Last April, House Beautiful flew to Holland to see in advance the wealth of beauty to be imported for our gardens next spring. These pictures, taken at Keukenhof, the magnificent gardens at Lisse, show the minor bulbs beautifully combined with the tulip, daffodil, and hyacinth. To make countless other lovely groupings, all you need to know is which of the major bulbs will flower early enough to overlap the bloom of the little ones at their peak.

Most little bulbs come early. Faithful to their names are glory-of-the-snow and winter aconite. The cheerful message of the snowdrop is that spring is on the way, and the crocuses come, as scattered jewels, with the bright new green of the early grass.

These three, along with scilla, muscari, anemone, eranthus, and a choice few others, may be minor in size, but not in the charm they bring or in their varied garden use. If you plant them with a generous hand—by hundreds instead of by tens—they'll play a starring role on their own for more continuous seasons than My Fair Lady. Even in supporting parts, they may steal the scene.

WHAT GOES ON UNDER GROUND

Safely protected within each bulb you plant this fall are flowers in exact replica of those it produced last spring. They are as sure to come forth next season as anything you can put into the ground. And put them into the ground you must—as soon as possible. The roots will begin to grow, and charge the bulbs with food and water until the chill of winter ushers in the dormant season.

When the ground is warm enough, in the spring, the flowering cycle begins. A pale white leaf tip breaks through the top of the bulb and pushes upward. When the leaf reaches the light it turns green, the leaves unfold, the stem rises, and the flower comes to bloom. But here, for most of the tulips, hyacinths, and daffodils, the natural cycle should be checked. When the flowers begin to fade, they should be picked to keep them from going to seed. The production of seed tends to weaken a plant. With some bulbs, this will diminish the size and number of flowers the following year. The minor bulbs, however, will thrive and increase over the years even though their flowers are not removed after blooming. Some reseed themselves and spread beautifully.

When the flowers have gone, the leaves begin to turn yellow. The bulbs, at this stage, are forming next year's flowers, and the foliage provides necessary nutriment. It should not be removed until it has dried and fallen to the ground. Then, after cutting the dry leaves, is the time to lift and divide any plantings that have become too crowded. The sooner this is done, the more easily the bulb will establish roots before winter comes.

As a rule of thumb, bulbs should be planted about twice as deep as they are wide. The drawings here show a tulip and a daffodil, of average size, in scale with some of the favorite little bulbs for planting in combination with the larger ones. While these are perhaps best known, there are other minor bulbs of equal charm. The snowdrop (Galanthus) is a delightful small flower with nodding blooms of frosty white. TWO GUEST HOUSES

BRUCE HARLOW

The ultimate in hospitality, a separated guest house. A two-way luxury, it gives more privacy to guests and maintains privacy for the host family. By having their own completely personal quarters, many guests feel more at home, more relaxed. They can more easily set their own schedule. The energies of guest children are more easily satisfied. Often a main house may not have adequate facilities for guests, with no easy direction in which to expand, another reason for a separate structure. Because of its physical separation, a guest house can have attractive use even when not called upon for company. For the owners, it can be a retreat, a change of scene, a quiet place for work or study. Or a place to isolate a teen-age party. On these pages, from East and West, two guest-house solutions in two different idioms.

In California, an unappreciated outbuilding was transformed to provide guest quarters, with facilities that were unknown and unneeded in the Victorian Age when the main house was built. In those long-ago years, when the house had been part of a ranch, the stone structure had supported a water-tower tank. Later, the tank razed, the base—now flat-roofed—had served for storage. In the present remodeling, Landscape Architect Thomas Church added to the base a second floor under a red-cedar shingle mansard roof, in a style that blends the old with the new. Its dormers are an exact replica of those on the main house. Upstairs, reached by a charmingly meandering stairway, is a guest room and bath, its decoration reminiscently Victorian. Downstairs, to serve a new heraldic-cross swimming pool, are dressing rooms and a sauna. The structure is electrically heated. Crepe myrtles were planted for terrace shade. Home of Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Dohrmann

NORMAN MC GRATH

In New York State, a guest house that is not even on the same property as the main house. To accommodate guests, this small cottage was acquired nearby. It was an effective solution where the house lot could not gracefully or logically accept an added structure. As an off-property house, it has the added advantage that it can be rented out when not otherwise needed. Since it was originally built as a full-time dwelling, this guest house is more than mere room and bath. Though meals and diversion are at the main house, the kitchen here offers the guest coffee or refreshment at his leisure, with choice of taking it indoors or on the terrace. Over the dining table hangs a French wire basket, ringed with tiny electric candles and filled with dried hydrangeas. The spindles that screen and de-emphasize the stairway are really balusters, joined end to end with metal bands. Taking advantage of the roof slope and an awkward chimney, in bedroom at far left, a bed-alcove was created. The valance and curtains, framing the bold wall design, produce a semi-canopy effect. In the bedroom, near left, white paint on a low, board ceiling achieves a maximum sense of airiness and spa... Guest house remodeled by Giovanni Schiavone and Gerard Rebouillat...

Hospitality starts at the front door, but it often ends at the guest room. When company stays overnight, what happens in your house? A few cautionary words on the physical amenities of the guest room and bath, and, on the next two pages, we visit the home of a perfect, always entertaining hostess

A WARMHEARTED ROOM FOR GUESTS

The unobtrusive guest room, photographed in a marvelous Beverly Hills home to be shown in full in a future issue of House Beautiful. Left, a handsome wrought-iron bed, Portuguese, making its way as a sofa, tucked into an alcove made by building out a double-depth bookcase (see the full room, above). Curtain fabric and matching wallcovering, Scalamandre. Bedside chair is Directoire; wall sconces, French antiques, gilded bronze. Don Luckett, owner-decorator.

DANFORTH-TIDMARSH

After the plane has been met, the flushed cheeks kissed, the children told how terribly big they've gotten, the grown-ups told they never change ("not in 20 years!"), isn't it delicious to arrive at the house and find yourself (soon) in a room of your own, not only well stocked with the creature comforts of a good hotel, but with some charming and unexpected luxuries as well. Whether an out-and-out guest room that lays serenely in wait for its people, or a room that doubles as a study at their departure, it is scarcely surprising that a lovely room will quell the vague disquiet felt—except for the young or unusually adaptable—at seeking out a "strange bed."

It is easy to assume that all is heartfelt, leaping enthusiasm on the part of guests and hosts alike—hospitality joyfully given and received. But in reality both approach this living arrangement with some trepidation. The hosts may be nervous and doubting; they must assume responsibility for any disasters (rain or boredom or 24-hour virus). It's their fault; it's their property. The guests, on the other hand, have nothing to offer but themselves. It is not surprising—and check this with your friends—that many would rather register at a nearby hotel than put the bonds of friendship to the test.

House guests are special people who require special care and nurturing—after all, you did invite them—and your goal and their reason for accepting your invitation was mutual enjoyment eagerly anticipated. They should—and they must—be treated with, if not pomp and parade, certainly with affection and honor and courtesy. Although the parties at this season (Please turn to page 315)

HOW ONE HOSTESS PAMPERS HER GUESTS

Five examples here from one of our favorite hostesses. Edith Key Haines, whose enchanting house and gardens were shown at their entertaining best in our February issue. She has not one rare guest room, but several, in which to bed down her visitors. In these photographs you see a few of the arrangements she has made to make them comfortable. Mrs. Haines's hospitality is a delightful combination of old-fashioned Victorian: many rooms, many visitors—and modern: buffets and tray meals, short-cut cooking. Her planning is exquisite in its details, from the arrival bouquet in the guest room to the wake-up coffee pot ready at the bedside. Most of Mrs. Haines's cooking is done beforehand, leaving her free to enjoy the time with her guests. "I always like to have this house full of people," she says. And the guests are always happy to be there.

Brought in the night before when the beds are turned down, a pretty china coffee service. The flower-bedecked pot is ready to brew an eye-opening cup just as soon as it's plugged in. The tray can be moved right to the bed, if desired. The fresh flowers in the vase are from Mrs. Haines's garden.

Everything a woman might want
In the dressing-table drawer, the necessities and the luxuries: a frilly night cap (this for a seashore house where curls might wilt); straight and safety pins; a complete sewing kit; an assortment of hairpins—black, gray, and white; facial tissues; a mirror; make-up basics, for emergencies.

Your own hotel writing room

In this antique desk is everything a letter writer needs: notepaper, magnifying glass, a calendar up to date, Scotch tape, a note pad for jottings, pens, and, thankfully, stamps. All this designed to save a guest some special trip to the post office or store, and all arranged with taste and care.

To insure a good night's sleep

For a chilly evening, a warm throw and a heating pad to curl up with. For luxury, the lace-edged pillow case, the rose-petaled blanket cover. For reading, a prop pillow. For sleeping tight, a pretty mask. All so cozy you might just decide to spend all your time here in bed and never come downstairs.

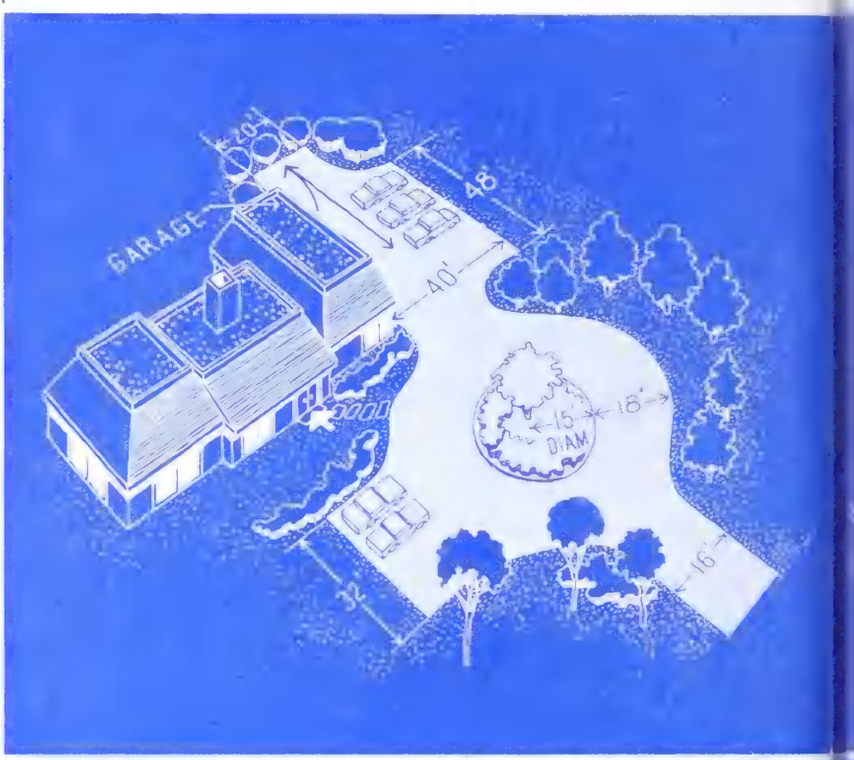
Twin beds, each one with decent-wattage reading lights, aimed, sensibly, at the book, so that guests may read or sleep independent of each other. There is also a clock-radio, ashtray and cigarettes, and a selection of books in case you forget your own. In the corner, the ever-present [illegible]

Here's everything you need to know to provide plentiful parking for your guests and yourself

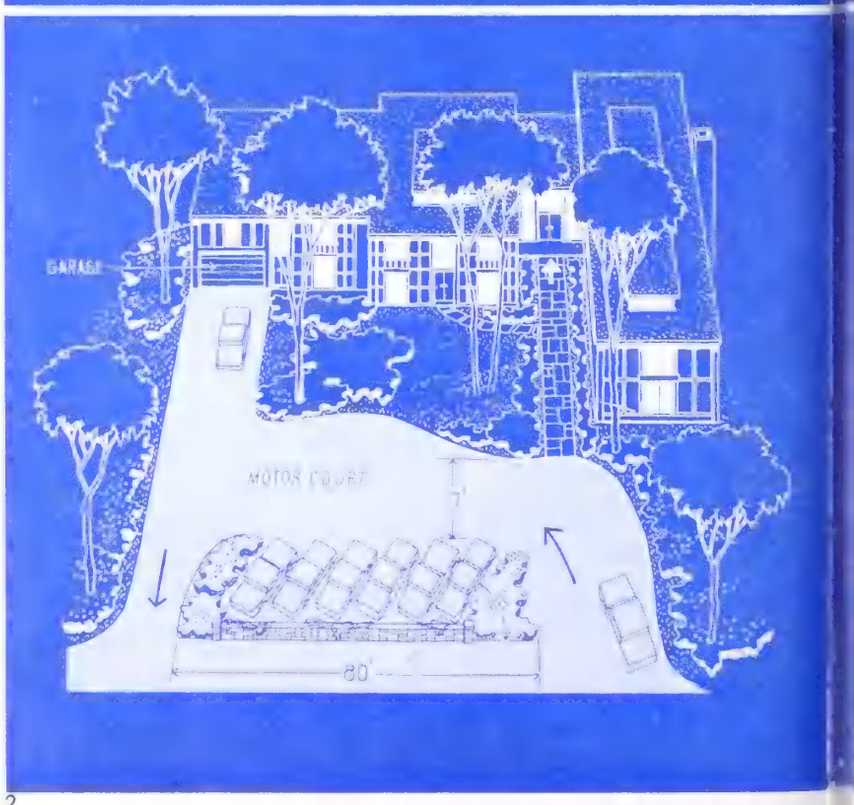
THE COMPLETE PARKING TICKET

By DAVID X. MANNERS

A house begins at its lot-line. So does its sense of welcome. A guest's arrival is usually by private car, so the arrangements you make for its reception and accommodation are an immediate expression of your concern and forethought.



There's also another side to the matter. An ample provision of off-street parking reduces yard maintenance. Paving is easier to care for than growing things, and in proper proportion can please the eye with pattern, texture, and color not otherwise found in the garden. Further, it can double as play space, for badminton, shuffleboard, and all kinds of ball games. It can mean greater safety, by eliminating the hazards of backing up and the need for ever parking in the street.



How much is enough?

Three kinds of off-street parking are regularly needed. They are for: 1. Family. 2. Guests. 3. Service. There should be enough, and more, to handle the average day-to-day demands. Providing two or more separate areas is often more desirable than having one large space. It puts parking closer to the destination and offers a variety of choices.

Prime parking is near the front door and is the kind visitors and family members will use most often. It's the most convenient. Parking space near the kitchen entrance can meet important service and delivery needs and will keep trucks away from the front door. Parking near the garage can save time and effort when there is no reason for putting the car under roof. It may also be a logical place to park boat or trailer. Under special conditions, parking may be desirable near swimming pool, tennis courts, stables, or other facilities. Where a driveway is long, pull-off parking space near the street end may be useful, particularly in (Please turn to page 306)

1. A circular driveway lets traffic come right to the doorstep, and if wide enough for two cars, as this one is, permits parking in one lane as well as on pull-offs. Shrubbery screens the front parking from house view. Exploiting garage turn-around area for service parking keeps trucks from front door.

2. If local ordinances do not require that parking areas be kept behind established setback lines, an arrangement like this can be effective. Cars are kept out of driveway circulation pattern and area can be screened from both house and street view. Parking at a 60-degree angle requires a minimum of 17 feet backup space. Exit drive is ten feet wide.

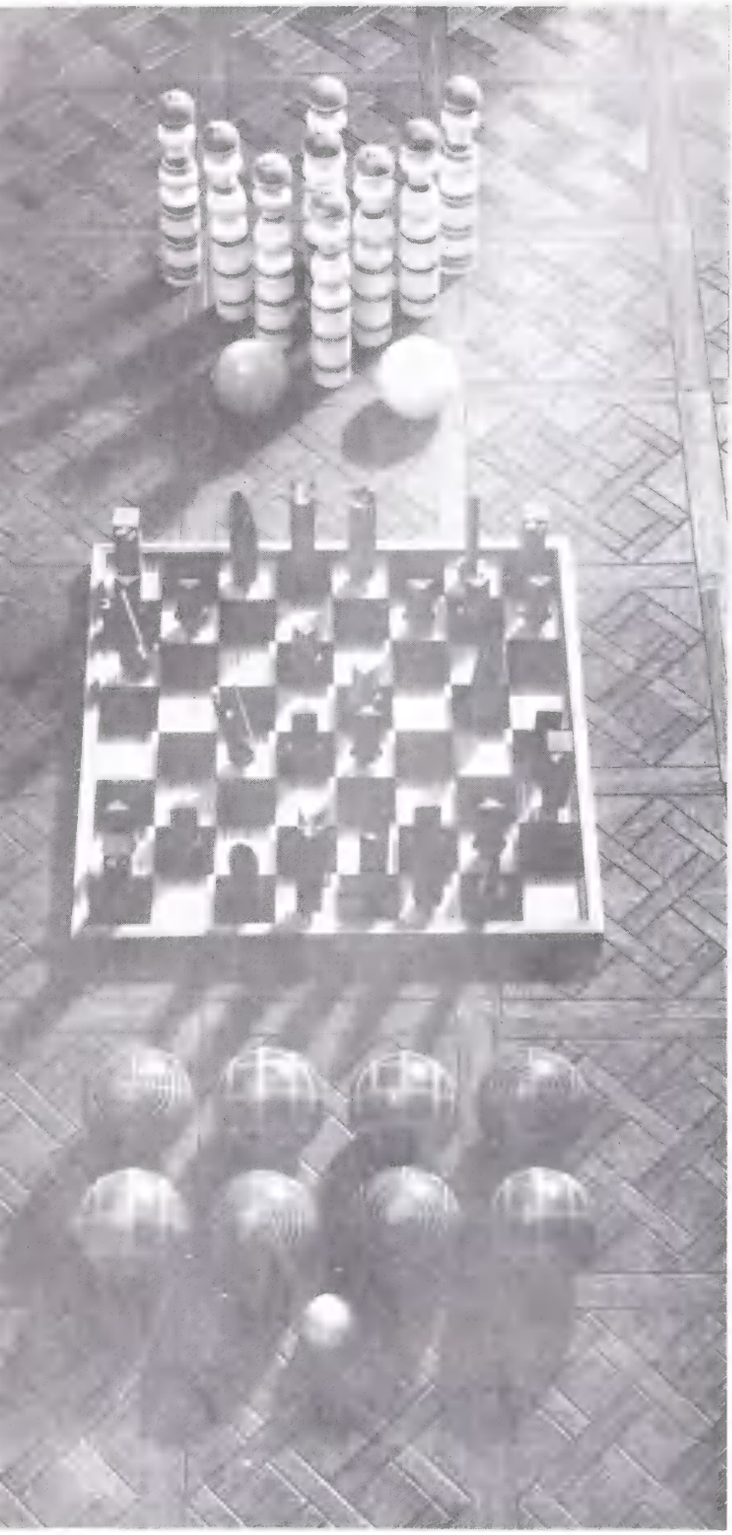
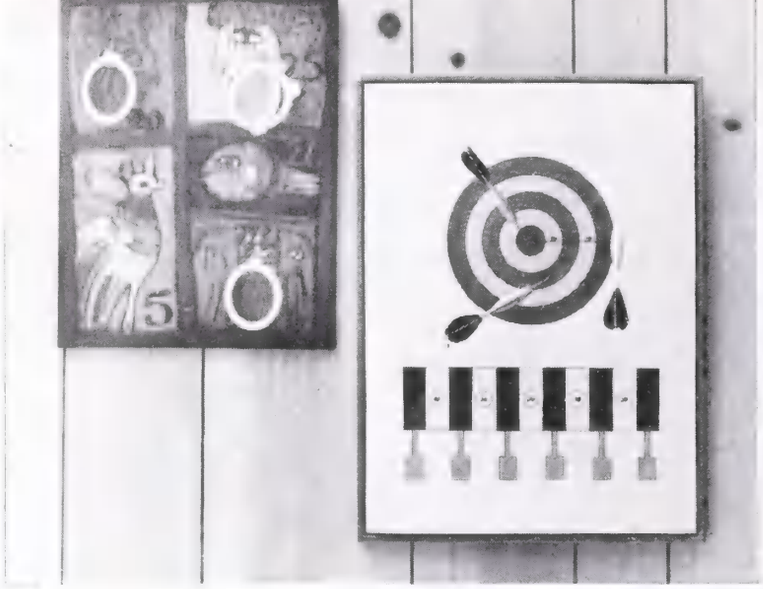
DRAWINGS BY MADELAINE THATCHER



3. As shown here, only a little extra width need be added to some driveways to provide improved parking facilities. Angle parking is easier to get in and out of than parallel parking and may allow three cars to park in the space of two. Clearance of ten feet behind cars keeps driveway clear, uncluttered.

4. Driving up to the front door under cover of a roof is the ultimate in convenience. Here it is accomplished with a roof that joins house to garage, creating a drive-through carport. Garage faces rear of lot, so its opened doors do not display interior to street. Circular pattern of traffic simplifies turning cars around, minimizes necessity for backing up.



5. Parking at a 45-degree angle can have as little as 12-foot backup space. In this plan, as used at 1965 Pace Setter house, 17 feet allows passage for two cars. A tree planted beside each parking space will grow to shade each car. Covered walk parallels parking, leads to house. Rectangular basin at center of court was designed to take paving's rain runoff.

NEW ADULT GAMES

Not since the halcyon days of great English country house parties have guest-played games been so popular. Games of all kinds, played to test strategy in drawing rooms and athletic dexterity on clipped green lawns were, as now, lavished with the craftsman's arts. The games shown on these pages contend with collector's prizes for space on table tops and walls. Doubling as games, op-art wall paintings provide targets for feathered darts and tossing rings. Jigsaw puzzles derived from great collections of art are beautiful enough to frame and hang. These games that charm party guests also offer valuable clues for Christmas gifts. Available in stores or by mail. For sources, see page 312.

THE HANDSOMEST PARTY TABLES

Table settings can say the nicest things. They speak for the hostess and of her. A sense of being welcomed, honored, special, emanates from the very silver, linen, china, and glass when these have been set out with thought, grace, and imagination. Women today, however busy, can take pleasure in such stagecraft. In the whole house there is no other area as limited as a table top that can be used to make so important and complete an impression. Every party is an opening night, and the success of the performance depends to a considerable degree on getting off to a good start with a well-orchestrated table setting. Handsome. Harmonious. Appropriate. On these and the next two pages, half a dozen examples of various party tables, ranging in mood and purpose from the romantic drama of the one opposite and the contemporary classicism of the setting above on to the less formal, no less handsome, ones pictured on the following pages.

The matching tables, left, have look-again beauty. Well worth repeating: the centerpiece combining fresh flowers, silk ones, grapes, and ferns. Contributing to the romantic effect: antique French plates; Mexican hand-wrought silver; Bavarian stemware rimmed and crested in gold; a bronze-and-marble candelabra. The flower arrangement by David Jones. Owner-decorator, Don Luckett.

Sunday supper on a winter's night. A cozy, relaxed affair. Cheery, here, with firelight and the glow of tapers in an heirloom candelabra. The high lustre of silver and the low lustre of pewter complemented by a flame-stitch tablecloth as brilliant as a fire opal. Centerpiece, dried flowers in a harvest of fall colors, arranged by MacDonald Forbes. "Henri IV" Alenite ovenware from Copeland and Thompson. "Queen Anne" design stemware of hand-cut lead crystal by Fostoria. Napkins, echoing the blue "flame" in the tablecloth, Belgian Linen. The cloth, by Cohama, from Stroheim & Romann. Luncheon Provençal. A fresh-baked crusty loaf of bread, red wine at hand, a hearty hot soup—onion, like as not. These the beginnings of such a peasant-simple meal as the true gourmet often prefers and always relishes. All the more when he can look out on sunlit country greenery, and when the table setting is in accord with the menu, as here. The tablecloth, in "Roman Tile" print, from Fallani and Cohn, and single-color napkins, all Belgian Linen. The bowls and plates, in the "Baldelli" pattern, by Laveno Italian Ceramics. Tin soup bowls, with covers, imported from France by Bloomingdale's. Wine glasses, Bonniers. Nobly simple sterling is Wallace's brushed-surface silver in "Royal Satin" pattern.

Top of the morning, right, a table setting blithe in mood and designed to brighten the sleepiest eyes. And far too attractive to be shut out by a newspaper. For openers, a breakfast cloth and napkins of Belgian linen from Fallani and Cohn. More of the same tucked under the cargo of croissants in a basket from Bloomingdale's. In harmony here, but as apropos on a formal dinner table: Block china, circled by rows of flowers in the "Jardin" pattern; the crystal goblets, as fresh and as clear as country air, a Baccarat design, "Château Lascombes"; the silverware, Gorham's delicately elaborated "Chelsea," sterling example of an obliging A.M.-P.M. pattern.

Assembled here, starters for a fireside buffet supper, a kind of entertaining as informal as a disco evening—and as favored by the young—but, like any other party, the better for good planning. Chosen as an effective foil for the strongly channeled verticals of the "Bernadette" silver design, a table runner with a bold curvilinear pattern. In keeping, the nice simplicity of Belgian Linen napkins, hand-blown crystal, "Adam" pattern china, "Novum Cobalt" serving bowls, wood candleholders. The sterling, the crystal, candleholders, and skewers all from Georg Jensen. The china, the table runner, from Seabon. Serving bowls, from Pasco China. THE GUESTS ARE IN THE KITCHEN

By NANCY CRAIG

And happily so. In more homes and at more times. Not perhaps the formal dinner guest, but everything short thereof. To look at it another way, the cook is in the parlor. And even more happily so, for she can participate in the life of the party as she prepares the food in its last delicious stages. On these and the next two pages, three kitchens deliberately planned for this new kind of entertaining. Each one has been remodeled, enlarged to make space for a generous table (not a breakfast bar). Two have fireplaces in the early keeping-room tradition. All are the kitchens of dedicated cooks, their credentials revealed in their efficient working arrangements and in their wide variety of implements.

POTS AND PANS —AND GOOD FOOD— FROM PROVENCE

John and Suzanne Verdery spent a sabbatical year in southern France and brought back with them not only the marvelous collection of cooking tools you see here but a love of Provençal food. Rev. Verdery is Headmaster of the Wooster School in Danbury, Connecticut, and his home—its kitchen designed by Architect Albert H. Riese, Jr.—is often a gathering place for the boys. It is not at all unusual for Suzanne Verdery to prepare dinner for 30 or to serve tea to 150 parents and sons. She and her husband are both experienced cooks, and the equipment in the kitchen serves them well. The range is a professional one with six burners, a flat metal grill, and a broiler. The large center island has slots for more than a dozen knives in its chopping block top. Opposite, top: Beyond the food-preparation area is a second sink, for flower-arranging. Below, a glimpse of the table and fireplace. In the fireplace is a rotating spit, a tourne-broche, brought back from Carpentras, France. The mustard tiles around the fireplace are from Apt. On the top shelf, on this page, is one of the revealing hallmarks of a fine cook: a fish steamer.

A KITCHEN WITH THE BEST OF TWO CENTURIES

At the right, only the old beams reveal that this sleek and efficient working kitchen is actually in an 18th-century Connecticut farmhouse. The full story is told below, with the other end of the kitchen in view. The large, comfortable room was once three small farm rooms. The walls and center island were paneled with weathered barn siding, the pieces carefully matched in a treasure hunt from one end of the state to the other. The flooring throughout is solid oak, found in the attic of the farmhouse, finished with an oil treatment. In front of the reconstructed brick fireplace is a Colonial harvest table and handsome ladder-back chairs. In the working kitchen, the best of the 20th Century: yellow and gold cabinets of the latest vinyl-on-steel, stainless-steel sink and counter. The windows also reflect the old and the new: a many-paned Colonial contrasts with a modern wood casement.

IN A CALIFORNIA RANCH HOUSE, THE GOURMET TOUCH

When an American woman marries a Frenchman who has a great knowledge of and a keen interest in food, there isn't much she can do except join him. On this page is the kitchen of one such woman, whose original interest in cooking was stimulated by her husband's appreciation of the art. Together they decided what they needed in the way of a kitchen, making long lists of requirements that they submitted to the kitchen design specialist, Janean. The result: a French country kitchen deep in the heart of the Salinas Valley. The spacious area is divided in two by the sink island, the counter made from a California tile that most closely matches a French peasant tile. To the right of the sink, above, is a long cutting-board counter, set by design at a lower height, for working. To the left is the counter range, canopied by a massive copper hood. The wall ovens are beyond, as seen in the photograph at right. The cabinets are walnut-stained oak, custom designed to achieve the paneled look of a French country house. On the provincial table, strawberries on the stem, to dip in brown sugar and/or sour cream, with a rosé wine.

Clue to a cordial house, this downstairs sitting-reception room in a glow of warm colors. Note that the satin over-drapes are faced and cuffed in pattern, a plain-print duet repeated by the table skirts. All furniture, except the Hickory Chair bench, traditional English, from Globe.

A MOST ENTERTAINING HOUSE

Editor: JACK L. HENDRIX

Our hospitable make-believe couple, Dr. and Mrs. X, acquire a Victorian townhouse in New York (could be in almost any city). Except for one dancing daughter, their children are grown and flown, coming home for holidays, for parties. Schemed for entertaining: the sitting-and-reception room, above, just inside the front door; the spacious, expansible dining room; a second-floor sequence of rooms that can be opened into one for dances or musicales; an enchanting guest room. "Stage designer" for the whole house, Interior Designer Jay Dorf. His color plan, a flow of close harmonies. His tour de force: showing the virtuoso range of man-made Celanese fibers in such diversities as sheer curtaining, nubby wall-covering, rich upholstery, sturdy rug pile. Save for a few antiques from his own collection, the furnishings Mr. Dorf selected can be found in furniture and department stores all over the country. More on the next four pages.

Draperies and wallcoverings of the same brocade (far less costly than it looks) give a charming unity to the dining room. An adjoining terrace provides expansion space for cocktail parties. The octagonal dining table expands to seat 12 readily. For two, the small table for breakfast or tea. "Heirloom" tea service by Oneida. All the furniture, mahogany, from Hickory Chair. In the guest bath, above, the calm colors of the guest bedroom are echoed in a lively floral, the same pattern shared, for unity, by shower curtain and wallcovering, both specially treated to make them splashproof.

Emphatic pattern, sweeps of blues, interesting textures give the master bedroom, left, a character at once vigorous and charming. The pattern, a floral matelassé as boldly handsome as crewelwork. The wallcovering, a robust nubby blue. Repeatedly, glints of white, as in the curtain's cuff above, and the counterpoint of strongly grained pine, as in the headboard and night stand, from the King's Arrow Collection by Sprague & Carlton. Easy chair and ottoman by Heritage. Benches by Drexel. Round table, antique.

Complete and delightful, the guest bedroom, right, with dressing table, pier glass, and desk as special boons. The reposeful color plan picks up tang from pattern—scenic fabric as wallcovering and draperies, the bedspreads' quilting, the bamboo motifs. Significant note here: the presence of several painted pieces—benches, mirror stand, headboard—a tip-off to the rising importance of the painted. Bedspreads by Nettle Creek. All bamboo-motif furniture by Thomasville.

DESSERT

ARTHUR BECK

Stunning climax to a gala dinner: The creamy Maltaise Rice Ring, with fresh oranges, glazed with apricot purée, garnished with candied peel; or the Babas au Rhum, soaked, literally and liberally, in dark rum, dressed with cherries and bits of angelica; or the fabulous Vacherin, a snow-white "nest," filled with ice cream, garnished with whipped cream, candied violets.

SPECTACULARS

Take an adjective, any adjective—smashing, elegant, divine, delicious—and you will have aptly described all, or any one, of the lovely desserts we have planned to see you through your holiday entertaining with eclat. Since your dessert should always be planned in relation to the flavors and textures of the foods that precede it, it might be fun in this instance to decide on the dessert first and work backwards, planning your menu around it. The desserts we have chosen do not present much of a preparation problem, since none is difficult to make. All of them can be fixed a day ahead—indeed, must be—leaving you free to turn your mind to the other food.

Maltaise Rice Ring

1½ cups long-grain rice
3½ cups milk
½ teaspoon salt
⅓ cup sugar
½ cup orange juice
Grated rind 1 large orange
¾ cup heavy cream, whipped
Apricot preserves
3 to 4 cups orange sections (about 6 naval oranges)
⅓ cup Grand Marnier
Candied orange peel

Wash the rice under cold, running water, rubbing it well between your hands until the water runs clear. Drain well. Turn into a large, heavy, enameled saucepan, add the milk and salt, and bring to a boil. Turn down the heat, cover, and simmer 30 minutes or until all the liquid has been absorbed. Take off the heat, stir in the sugar, and allow to cool 15 minutes or so. Stir in the orange juice, orange rind, and finally the whipped cream.

Oil a 9-inch ring mold thoroughly with vegetable oil. Spoon the rice mixture into the mold; cover top securely with foil or Saran to keep it from drying out. Refrigerate until cold. This will take several hours. Meanwhile, push the apricot preserves through a sieve to purée. Refrigerate until cold.

Turn the rice ring out on a serving dish. Spoon the apricot purée over the entire surface of the mold to make a rich glaze. Fill the center of the mold with the well-drained orange sections, and sprinkle with the Grand Marnier. Garnish the ring with candied orange peel, your own (see HOUSE BEAUTIFUL, December 1965) or commercial. Serves 6 to 8.

Baba au Rhum

½ package active dry yeast or ½ cake compressed yeast
3 tablespoons sugar
½ teaspoon salt
¼ cup lukewarm milk
2 eggs, slightly beaten
1 cup sifted, all-purpose flour
¼ cup soft butter
¼ cup dark rum

Grease 12 baba molds or, lacking those, muffin tins. Set aside.

Sprinkle the yeast over ¼ cup lukewarm water to soften, then combine in a big bowl with the sugar, salt, lukewarm milk, and eggs. Stir in the flour, and beat the dough very hard with a wooden spatula until very smooth and little bubbles show. About 8 minutes of vigorous beating.

Cover the bowl with a tea towel, set in a warm place, away from drafts, and allow to rise until double in bulk. Then beat in the butter until it is completely blended in. Fill the prepared molds about one-third full and allow the dough to rise a second time until almost double in size.

Place all the baba molds on a cookie sheet and bake in a preheated 350° F. oven for 20 to 25 minutes or until a toothpick comes out dry when tested in the center. Unmold in a shallow dish with a rim, and cool slightly.

While babas cook, make this syrup: Bring 1 cup of water and ½ cup of sugar to a boil, stirring constantly. Cool to lukewarm, and stir in ¼ cup dark rum.

Prick tops of the babas in several places with a toothpick, and spoon the syrup over the tops very gradually. Allow them to stand for 30 minutes, basting frequently so they will have absorbed as much of the syrup as possible. They should be very moist and spongy.

To finish the babas in traditional style: Heat about half a cup of apricot preserves in a small saucepan. When warm, work through a sieve to make a fine purée. Spoon or brush the warm purée on the tops of the babas. Garnish the top of each with a candied cherry and almond slivers or bits of green angelica.

CHILDREN'S PARTIES

THAT MAKE MEMORIES

Everything is ready. The house glows with excitement. Balloons float lazily at the ceiling, and crepe paper streams from the chandelier. In the kitchen, hidden away, is the cake, the birthday name written, shakily but proudly, in pink frosting surrounded by red roses. The birthday girl is suddenly quiet—shining in her new dress and new shoes. For her, this is the most glorious day of the year, circled in red on the calendar and awaited week by week, then day by day. She stands, a little nervous and all butterflies, waiting for the doorbell and her friends, feeling something special that no one will ever be able to explain to her—now, or when she is 21.

For her mother, too, the moment is precious, beholding the joy and wonder of the pleasured child. For both, the day will make many memories.

Where does it begin, this day of days? The plans start long before, in the dreams of a child only occasionally expressed, in the down-to-earth advice of experienced party-givers, in the remembrance of how it was last year.

Don't plan a party to impress adults; plan it to suit what your child likes to do and will do at his particular age. Let him (or her) help plan it. A surprise party is lost on most children; it robs them of the pleasure of the anticipation. Furthermore, they miss out on an opportunity to make and carry out their own plans.

Start by asking your child what kind of party he would like to have. He'll probably want it just like the party he went to last month, but he may also be intrigued by the thought of trying something different.

Younger children will have very definite ideas about who should come to their party. They will enjoy "helping" you make the invitations and decorations and devote about twice their usual attention span to shopping with you for the prizes and favors. Everyone loves to receive gifts, but some (Please turn the page)

Fun, food, and a secret wish. The game that took longest (because no one wanted to stop) was Under the Broomstick, above and below, left. Below right, Polly calls for an impromptu toast to her mother: "To Mrs. Wallace, who is a good cook and has a sense of humor." Opposite page: The food was a do-it-yourself buffet of sandwich makings, carried to the garlanded table. Helium balloons floated at the ceiling. Below: When the cake came, giggling suddenly ceased. Polly wished, then blew out the candles.

children act as if presents were the most important part of a party and become distressingly single-minded about tearing open their gifts without so much as a hello or thank-you to the donors. Before the big day, play "pretend party," letting your youngster take a different role each time to show him how to accept presents graciously, cut the cake, and say good-by.

Seven- to eleven-year-olds are apt to have decided opinions about a theme for their party, who should be invited, what games should be played, and what refreshments served. Let him assume all the responsibility he will take—it's his party! It is likely he will enjoy selecting the favors and prizes without you. Discuss how much money can be spent, then leave the rest up to him. Don't worry if the things he chooses are not what you would—his friends will let him know, candidly enough, whether they approve.

How soon can you start with parties? When the child is a toddler, the birthday should be shared only with relatives. By kindergarten age, when he has his own friends and understands group participation, he is ready for his very own party.

Unfortunately, the actual birth date—unless it falls on a non-school day—is not always the best time for a party. Children are tired after a full day of study; they need rambunctious, outdoor activity rather than the organized program necessary to the successful party. Discuss this with your child, because a party put off until Saturday isn't quite the same. If he agrees, let him pick a date close to his birthday when there is no school. A summer birthday may be moved ahead or postponed a month so that he or his friends won't be away on vacations. It's the party that really counts, but have a small celebration at the family dinner on the day.

The party time depends on the age group. Preschoolers are at their best in the morning, so consider 10:30-12:30 instead of the more usual 3-5 P.M. The guests' mothers should be present, but unobstrusively so. Give each guest a gaily wrapped trifle as he parts with a present for the birthday child. After the young host greets his guests, allow an hour for gift opening, play with toys, and simple games, then about half an hour for refreshments. (Please turn to page 417)

A PARTISAN VIEW OF APÉRITIFS

By WILLIAM CLIFFORD

American meals have changed since the 1920's, but what of our drinking practices? We now serve more wine with our far more cosmopolitan cuisine, but we still drink cocktails. And we drink our cocktails not only during the cocktail hour, but with the business lunch, before Sunday brunch, and at any time we want the relaxing wallop of a quick left to the discretion.

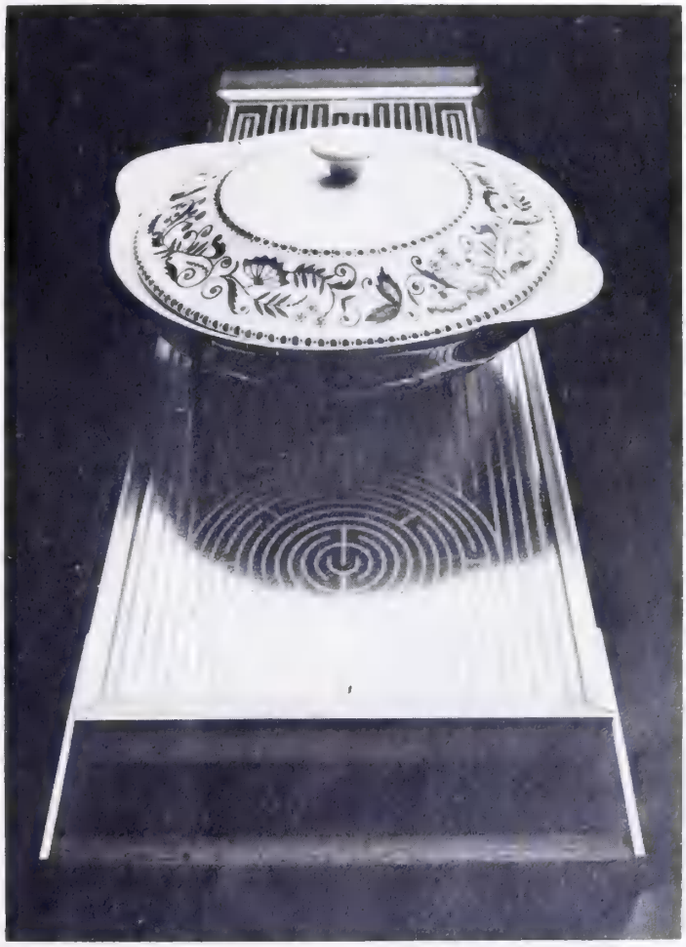
Perhaps it is time we covered our flanks and marked out the lines of battle between the "Martini" and the "Martini sec." Countless well-traveled Americans will by now have explained to the garçon that what they wanted was what the man at the next table got when he said "Martini": a glass of sweet vermouth made by the company of that name (Martini & Rossi in America), not a dry Martini like all the tourists. (The waiter understood—it had been explained to him before.) After some weeks or months of this, they came home with a taste for bitter-sweet predinner drinks "that did not paralyze the taste, make them suddenly fond of strangers and hostile to members of their families, induce them to sleep with their clothes on and miss buses and trains"—to quote Elliot Paul's durable book, The Last Time I Saw Paris.

Whether it was last year that you brought back your collection of Florentine leather and lace and happy memories of sipping Punt e Mes on Piazza della Signoria in the shadow of "David," or whether you hungrily scanned the countryside between Le Havre and Paris two decades ago, overjoyed that the familiar blue-painted walls still extolled DU/DUBON/DUBONNET—in either or any other case, if you've joined the expeditionary force and seen gay Paris-Rome-Madrid-Athens-Everywhere, you may be wondering why the civilized Old World apéritif hasn't replaced down-on-the-farm drinking here at home. Does such a mild, slow-acting drink suit the tempo of American life? Can it compete with the body blow of 90-proof-on-the-rocks in the bedlam of a Madison Avenue bar at midday? What are its possibilities and limits? Exactly what is an apéritif?

Anything drunk before a meal to whet the appetite —any drink that serves as an "opener"—counts as an apéritif, and in the broad spectrum of available tastes, you can pretty much choose what you like. Distinguished palates have sometimes had strange preferences. Wine connoisseurs may limit themselves to dry Champagne, dry Sherry, and Sercial (dry) Madeira—or they may not. The owner of Maxim's, Louis Vaudable, offers his knowing guests a glass of well-chilled old Sauternes, France's sweetest natural wine. The late Allan Sichel, an Englishman eminent in the French wine trade and author of The Penguin Book of Wines, had the same personal preference for Sauternes. Both of course favor Champagne as well. Sichel says, "Not only does it leave the palate clean, but it revives tired guests or hostess as quickly as any spirit, and by means of a far more gentle application of alcohol to the system." And both admit whiskey, although Sichel concedes that "the flavor of whiskey is foreign to wine and leaves the palate less ready for delicate flavors."

M. Vaudable also recommends hot and cold cups (or wine punches), which are always sweet. The French nation as a whole seems to prefer sweet apéritifs, mainly fortified and flavored (Please turn to page 303)

William Clifford is a well-traveled writer, editor, and food consultant who has come to appreciate the European pleasure in the apéritif, which is often misunderstood in this country.



The Salton Hotray® will keep meals hot before you serve them, as you serve them, after you serve them, so you can come back for seconds that taste like firsts.

Hot foods should be eaten hot. But seldom are because food cools off too swiftly. So not only do seconds always taste different than firsts—but sometimes, even firsts don't taste like firsts if you don't serve them instantly right out of the oven.

Putting foods back in the oven doesn't help. Because then they overcook. And dry out.

Then there are other problems with hot foods. Such as people coming late. Or people eating the same meal at different times—at breakfast, for example, when people rise at different times.

The Salton Hotray will relieve you of all these problems. And many more. Once and for all. Three meals a day. Every day in the year.

How the Salton Hotray works:

Hot foods lose their flavor in two principal ways. Overcooking. Or cooling off and drying out. Either way, they lose most of what they ever had. A Salton Hotray prevents both of these because the heat of its exclusive radiant heat, shatterproof glass panel is thermostatically controlled to a point right under the cooking point. So the food on it neither continues to cook, nor to stand around growing cold.

The most accurate way to explain the Salton Hotray is this: The Salton Hotray puts foods into a state of suspended animation. Thus, they neither progress. Nor regress. But stay exactly as they were when they came off the stove.

If you're the one who prepares the food at your house then, hopefully, the information you now possess will add years to your life. Enjoy them.

India ink. (Today a nonwashable felt pen is easier to work with, but they were hard to come by when I did the peacock.) I then worked from the drawing to the canvas, using a great variety of wools the way one uses paint on a palette. But there was this difference: I used a technique that painters call pointillisme. There are no areas of solid color, no matter how small, in this tapestry; all areas are made up of individual dots of color.

If this sounds like a tiresome process, it is. It does not mean doing a stitch at a time and then changing threads: it means scattering stitches at carefully controlled random and then filling in and filling in with other colors similarly scattered. The only tapestry I ever quit in the middle was this one. It waited half-done for a whole year before I gathered the patience to go back to it and finish it. To do such a piece, one needs a great assortment of colors and one also has to mix threads into strands to make still other colors. Preferably I use three-ply wool, and this is one of the reasons for doing so.

As I read this over, I realize that I am talking as one cook to another, and I will spare you further recipes of this sort.

I mentioned two other approaches to the design of needlepoint that I use: One is designing it myself (I do not pretend to be a good designer), and the other is making it up in the process of stitching it (I am a reasonably successful improviser, I immodestly think). Sometimes both these approaches will go together.

Very few of the many pieces I have designed myself seem to me to have been successful, but of the successful ones two involve trompe l'oeil. One of these eye-foolers is a vest which I made for myself some years ago. (It is reproduced in a book called Needlepoint Made Easy by Mary Brooks Picken and Doris White.) Everything about it is an illusion—a dollar bill and theatre tickets (in petit point) sticking out of the lower pockets (which are not really pockets at all), the pencils, fountain pens, cigars, and glasses out of the upper pockets, the watch chain, and the buttons. It is a sort of silver gray with pale orange pin stripes, and it pulls over the head. The illusion is successful, but the trouble with the vest is that it is so heavy that unless the temperature is below zero it is almost unwearable.

The other trompe l'oeil is in two sections, and only one of them is finished. Last Christmas I acquired a new hi-fi stereophonic contraption with two speakers, which fitted quite neatly into bookcases on either side of a fireplace. They looked rather like displaced persons among the books, and to remedy this I decided to cover them with needlepoint trompe l'oeil of books and other objects that might find themselves on shelves in a living room. The result is a row of books, some standing straight, some leaning, some with the titles done in petit point (my own books, of course), some looking from a distance as though the titles are legible (though they are not), and a silver mug filled with pencils, a pair of scissors, and a pipe. The effect is almost too good. The illusion is sufficiently convincing to make the needlepoint melt into the bookcase, and almost no one notices it. Needlepointers do not like their work to be invisible!

Improvising takes a variety of forms and approaches where I'm concerned. I've done pieces that look like patchwork quilts (which have been made into pillows), a great many imitations of swatches of material put together in irregular shapes. The pleasure of this is making up rather simple, geometrical textile designs as one goes along, and the economy of it is using up odd bits of wool left over from other pieces. I have also used basic geometric patterns such as the famous one, frequently seen in marble floors in European palaces, which gives the illusion of three dimensional blocks. Color variations can be played on this basic design, which adapts itself perfectly to the verticals and horizontals of tapestry canvas. (Indeed in the palaces of Venice, where I spent a month last summer, there are enough beautiful floor designs in marble to keep an army of needlepointers inspired for centuries.) One of the most successful chair seats I have done was taken from a geometric design in the carpet of a hotel ballroom, where I had to sit at a conference one afternoon listening for hours to dull speeches. Kaleidoscopic designs are also easily made up and can be set successfully in an orderly fashion on a solid-color background. They are perfectly adapted to the canvas, and interestingly they have a Victorian look for the simple reason that the kaleidoscope was an early Victorian invention and had considerable influence on Victorian design.

I am quite aware that none of the things that I do with needlepoint is in the least useful as suggestions to anyone else. I mention them because they are the sources of my satisfaction in an ancient craft that doesn't need to be stuck in any conventions, though most needlepointers work in strictly conventional designs. People who draw less well than I do (and there must be some) apply their imaginations in other ways to the selection of the designs they want to use; they let someone else do the drawings, but the pieces are no less original for that. One of the most accomplished needlepointers I know always has her ideas transferred to canvas by a needlepoint shop in New York, and they are hers, not theirs. There are others, many of them, whose work from my point of view is pure, unhappy corn—cute, tiresome, and to be justified only by the fact that it has kept what is obviously an idle mind from boring somebody else.

Not the least of the joys of needlepoint are its release of the mind. A piece that is too exacting, like the peacock I mentioned earlier, is not really a form of relaxation. Ideally a piece should have precise aspects that demand one's attention to detail and also areas of plain color, background, about which one can be absolutely mindless. One can think while doing needlepoint (I've got a fair amount of work done that way over the years), but one is not likely to brood over it. Its rhythms—stitching, changing threads, threading the needle, and the slowly growing areas of color—all have their minor satisfactions. There are times when only background is possible to work on; there are other times when it seems merely a bore. A good piece of needlepoint is an adaptable companion and never an imposition.

There is, I suspect, a special needlepoint temperament. Any number of people have said to me, "I should think you'd go out of your mind. I don't see how you have that much patience." They do not understand that one of the satisfactions of needlepoint is watching its slow growth, its gradual transformation from a pile of wool and a bare canvas into an object, however useless or useful, which one has created. They do not understand that there is a somewhat sensual pleasure in manipulating the materials (a carpenter understands this about wood), as there is visual pleasure in the subtleties and astonishments of the colors of wool. I have never known a painter or sculptor to question why I do needlepoint: they understand exactly how anyone can become involved in the problems and pleasures of a medium, any medium, of making a "plastic" or a "graphic" object—and good needlepoint is both.

I have no idea how many men do needlepoint. I imagine that they are few in comparison with the number who make furniture or boat models or who paint on weekends. (Physicians and surgeons are especially given to Sunday painting.) In 1963 I spent a couple of weeks in Morocco, and on a train from Marrakesh to Casablanca I took out my needlepoint and worked on it, quite aware that no one would pay the slightest attention to me. Handcraft is the daily bread of a great portion of the male population there, and a man working with wool and a needle is entirely unnoticeable. I believe, though I can't prove it, that this would be true in 90 percent of the countries of the world.

ESSENTIALLY it is the satisfaction of making things (an opportunity for which an automated society robs more and more people) that converts so many of us into laborers in our spare moments. Whether we wield a saw in a shop or a saucepan in a kitchen, or a chisel or paint brush in a studio is of secondary importance to the entirely human pleasure of converting raw material into controlled shapes. The tools of my sedentary relaxation happen to be needles and scissors, and the raw materials are wool and canvas. This sometimes strikes me as odd, but I yield to no one in my respect for them. However limited my talents, their possibilities for creation (and recreation) are infinite. ■

NEEDLEPOINT:
THEME AND VARIATIONS

How the extemporaneous needlepoint on pages 250-251 was done: photographs and descriptions of stitches; tips for beginners: materials needed, and sources

Extemporaneous needlepoint

If you have some knowledge of regular needlepoint, you may enjoy exploring these unorthodox approaches. They are all worked on needlepoint canvas, hence the name canvas work, by which it is also commonly known. Beyond this factor, each approach is different, as each individual designed his own piece and made stitches fit his needs rather than limit them, as is so frequently the case with conventional needlepoint. Several of them introduce stitches and ways of working not at all common to needlepoint.

Pointillisme Pillow. Russell Lynes, in his article on page 252, speaks of his personal technique, in which he completely disregards the usual convention of working stitches in rows either horizontally or diagonally, but rather thinks in terms of color alone, spotting his stitches in a carefully controlled random fashion. He uses the three-strand Persian yarn that many needlepointers favor because of its versatility, long-wearing quality, and lovely colors. Used as it comes in the full three strands, it just nicely covers the ten-to-an-inch, double-mesh canvas he ordinarily uses. (More about canvases and yarns later.) However, the three-strand yarn serves a special purpose in his way of working. Starting with perhaps only three closely related but different colors, by splitting and reassembling the strands in various 2-to-1 or even 1-1-1 combinations, a total of ten different colors emerge. The possibilities, calling the colors A, B, and C, read like this: A-3; B-3; C-3; A2-B1; A2-C1; A1-B2; A1-C2; B2-C1; B1-C2; and A1-B1-C1. If additional colors were to be added, the possibilities would soar astronomically. The art comes in choosing colors that, when combined, produce vibrancy but certainly not a speckly quality. It is the same principle that makes a cross-dyed fabric so much more interesting than one dyed in the piece. The back side of his work naturally lacks the absolute uniformity usually so highly prized by the more orthodox exponents of needlepoint, but the effect in the eye of the beholder is magnificent, and that is what really counts.

Baby's Rug, done in 10″ squares. Simple designs were drawn on the canvas with a waterproof, felt-tipped pen, and embroidered mostly in upright Gobelin stitch. However, the maker did not let the stitch govern her, and whenever a longer or shorter stitch, or one in a different direction, would express the drawing more graphically, she used it. After the design was completed, the background was filled in, again mostly with upright Gobelin stitch, varied where necessary to completely cover the canvas. Also, in a few instances, as in the waves under the boat, more design was effectively added right over the background with complete disregard of the counting of the canvas.

Chair Cushions. Mr. Monypenny tells us that he begins first with the backgrounds, deciding as he goes along just where he might wish to place the butterfly or insect. You will notice that no two are in exactly the same position on the pillow. Having decided where he wants these accents, he leaves quite a space open and draws it on the canvas, then works it with two strands of cotton mercerized embroidery floss, splitting the canvas for petit point (see diagram). After the accent is finished, he completes the background around it. Working as he does, he is able to vary his pace, alternating between the more taxing petit point and the less demanding background as the spirit moves him. The backgrounds he used in these pillows were straight and slanted Gobelin and brick stitch. In the pillow on the chair, he changed the slant of the stitch on alternate sides of the blocks to heighten the three-dimensional illusion.

Seat on Gilt Chair. This design was blown up photostatically from a silk dress print, then marked off with waterproof ink on the white 14-to-an-inch, single-mesh canvas, and worked in a conventional needlepoint stitch in the colors of the original print.

Cross-Stitch Rug. The maker of this rug, inspired by a small piece of hand-printed cotton, first worked out his design carefully on graph paper. He then cut the pattern apart into a center section and four border sections to be worked separately. Allowing about an inch extra around each section, he transferred the design to the 3½-mesh-to-an-inch canvas, marking where each stitch of the pattern would fall with the appropriate colors of waterproof marking pencils. (It is important to be sure that the canvas is used in the same direction of the grain throughout.) On the sewing machine, he then hemmed in the extra canvas right to the edge of the design, making the meshes coincide. Working with heavy rug yarn, in cross-stitch and making sure that all stitches crossed in the same direction, he worked right through hemmed portion and all, leaving only a single thread of the canvas as a border. He then joined the sections together, as is shown on page 300, and finished the outer edge of the rug by closely overcasting the single remaining outside thread of the canvas with rug yarn.

Flower Rug. Using stitches and yarn just as she would paint and brush strokes, this maker, working freehand, painted the flowers with yarn on the bare 7-mesh-to-an-inch canvas with 3-strand Persian yarn, sometimes split to only one or two for delicate detail. Then she filled in the background completely with a conventional needlepoint stitch, using 6 strands instead of 3 of the same Persian yarn. The rug was made in 15″ squares and joined together in exactly the same way as the cross-stitch rug, except that tent stitch was used to cover the joins. If you are unsure of your freehand embroidery prowess, flower designs such as these could be blocked out on paper, then roughly transferred to the canvas with felt-nibbed pens to serve as a pattern. For freehand embroidery, you might like to brush up on some of the crewel embroidery stitches.

Lion. Many medieval woodcuts lend themselves admirably to embroidery. This maker, an artist herself, simply sketched the lion in pencil on the white 14-mesh canvas and improvised with colors as she proceeded, using tent stitch and two strands of Persian yarn. Not quite finished, as you notice, she is still pondering over the color for the eyes. If you do not feel capable of undertaking the actual preparation of your design for stitchery, it is possible to take it to a professional in the needlepoint field who will transpose it, at the proper scale, to the canvas—even painting in the colors with waterproof oil paints—as a guide to be stitched over with matching yarns.

Three-Dimensional Needlepoint. Certainly the most unconventional of all the pieces shown, this one makes use of engineering principles of opposing stresses and strains. The design, begun in the center and worked out in all directions, recalls the intricate mazes of ancient Near Eastern ornament. And the direction in which the stitches were worked was changed in each adjacent area to heighten the effect. This also had the quite practical effect of helping to keep the pull even in all directions so that the piece did not distort. The three-dimensional effect is a happy accident that resulted from the maker's completely unorthodox method of stitching on the canvas in those areas. To see how he did it, refer to the stitch details. The large white pyramids have been firmly stuffed and lined from behind to keep their geometrically perfect shape. The smaller pink and red squares, though worked the same way, have been steamed down to lie as flat as possible.

Materials

Needlepoint is worked on canvas made especially for the purpose, having an equal number of threads per inch running vertically and horizontally. These serve as a gauge for the size of stitches one can make on them. There are single-thread (mono) canvases and double-thread canvases, where the threads are paired like those in our stitch details. Canvases are designed according to the number of meshes per inch. They run from

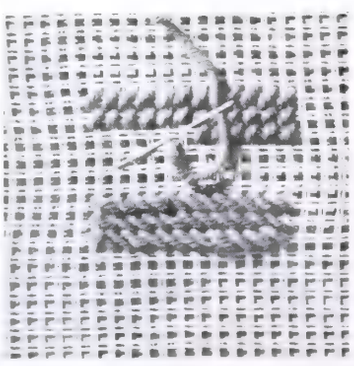
the coarsest rug canvas (3½ meshes to an inch) to very fine petit-point single-mesh canvas of 20 or more. The most widely used canvas is the 10-to-an-inch, double-thread tan canvas. However, if a design is to be painted directly on the canvas, most people prefer the single-mesh canvas in white, the most popular size being the 14 mesh.

To do good needlepoint, in addition to good design and skill, it is necessary to choose a combination of canvas and yarn that fit well together. In addition to the many sizes of canvas, there are many variations in yarns.

We can hope to mention only a few and shall confine ourselves to those used in the examples shown. The Persian yarn is probably the most versatile, as it comes in three strands that can be split up and used in any number that best fits the canvas. Used as it comes, it fits a 10-to-the-inch canvas; two strands fit a 14-mesh single-thread canvas, as do two strands of crewel yarn. One strand will fit a split double-mesh 10-to-the-inch canvas for petit point or an 18-mesh single-thread canvas. Used double (6 strands), it covers a 7-mesh canvas very well.

Most rug yarns will fill a 3½-mesh-to-the-inch canvas if done in cross-stitch, but would require a finer mesh if used in tent or half cross-stitch.

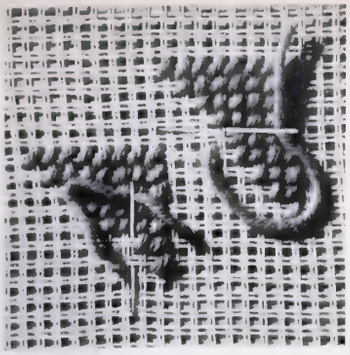
The Gobelin stitches usually require somewhat thicker yarn than the regular diagonal stitches in order to cover the canvas adequately.



Before committing yourself to any major piece, it is best to try out yarns and canvases to see if they fit the way you intend to work and the effect you hope to obtain. All the people whose work we show did just that.

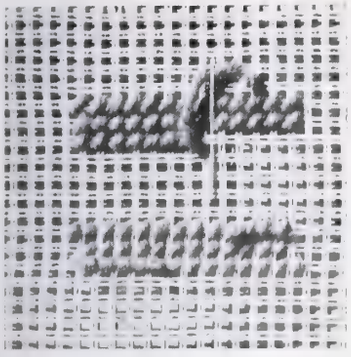
Canvas work is always done with a blunt-pointed tapestry needle. Not only do these vary according to the manufacturer, but there is also a wide diversity in personal taste. We suggest that you try out several different sizes and makes for yourself. Many people find that they must use a finer needle for design work than for general background. The needle should never be so fine as to cut the yarn, or so big that it has to be tugged to get it through the canvas. Here are some good sizes to start experimenting with:

Rug yarn, #5 needle
3-strand Persian on #10 canvas, #19 needle
2-strand Persian on #14 canvas, #21 or #22 needle
Petit point, #24 needle

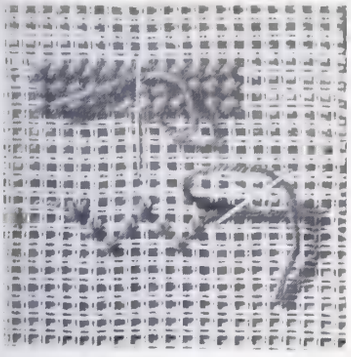


How to Work the Standard Needlepoint Stitches

These sample stitches have been worked with finer yarn than would normally be used to cover the canvas, so that the structure of the stitch will show more clearly.



Tent or Continental Stitch. Can be worked on either single or double-mesh canvas and is always worked from right to left. After one row is completed, turn the work around and work back in the other direction. It is the stitch used for petit point. The lower row of stitchery shows how tent stitch looks from the back.



Diagonal Tent or Basket Weave. This is the aristocrat of conventional needlepoint stitches because it distorts the canvas the least, gives the least ridgy look, and has the handsomest appearance on the back, from which it gets its name of basket weave. It is somewhat harder to learn to do well. As you notice, the rows are alternated, and it is not necessary to turn the work around. The detail at the right shows how the up-going rows are worked, and that on the left how to do the return row. Notice the different positions of the needle. It is very important to alternate the up and down rows accurate-

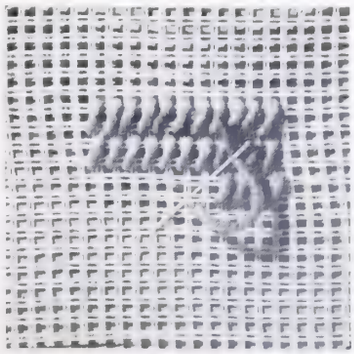
Cross-Stitch. Work first across a row as for half cross-stitch. Then, without turning the work around, go back across the row, slanting the stitches in the opposite direction. Stitches should always cross in the same direction. The back of the work should look almost exactly like half cross-stitch, and this stitch also can be done only on double-mesh canvas. Notice that, given the same gauge of canvas, a somewhat finer yarn is used than for half cross-stitch because there will be twice as many stitches covering it.



Below: When cross-stitches are scattered as part of a design, they should be done before the background is filled in and each stitch completed before proceeding to the next one, again taking care that they all cross in the same direction.

Petit Point. Here we have split the two-thread canvas with the blunt end of the needle so that it looks exactly like a single-mesh canvas. Petit point is worked in the tent stitch (see above). You will notice that each stitch covers only one-fourth as much space as when worked over two threads. It helps to keep the threads of the canvas separated for a small area, to run a temporary row of very heavy yarn around the area to be worked in petit point, splitting the threads as shown. The more evenly the threads are spaced when split, the evener the stitches.

Straight Gobelin Stitch. This is worked so that the stitches on the front of the work lie parallel to those of the canvas, not crossing any vertical threads. In the illustration, each stitch is worked over two sets of horizontal threads. However, for a longer effect, it can be worked over more horizontal threads.

stitch here is worked over two sets of horizontal threads and one set of vertical threads. The slant can be varied by changing the number of vertical threads in relation to the horizontal ones.

Brick Stitch. A variation of the Straight Gobelin Stitch. It is easiest to do in rows across and back, skipping a mesh in between on one row and filling it in on the return row, dropping the stitches of each succeeding row by one mesh.

Pyramids. This, so far as we know, is a chance invention of the maker of the piece shown in the front of the book, the secret being that he so crowded the back of the work with yarn that it has a tendency to raise that area. He worked from the outside of the square, after the diagonals of the design had already been done, forming each square with four separate triangles. The stitch used is Holbein or back stitch, worked on the diagonal. It consists of two spaces forward on the back of the work and one back on the front surface. By experimenting, we found that they seemed to rise even more if worked from the center out to the edges of the square.

Joining canvas worked in sections. As explained in the description of the cross-stitch rug, each section is hemmed to its finished size before being worked, leaving only a single thread on the edge of the canvas. These edges are then matched carefully, mesh for mesh, and buttonholed together with stout carpet-sewing thread. Then a row of cross-stitch (or tent stitch) in the appropriate color is worked over the join. If done properly, the join can be entirely invisible. Or, as is the case of the flower rug, a different color to accent the joinings can be used. Of course, it is absolutely necessary that the meshes of the two pieces to be joined be equal in number, or chaos will result.

Tips on working needlepoint

- Canvas should be sealed at the edges so that it does not ravel. This can be done with masking tape or a sewn-on binding. Or a ribbon of Elmer's Glue can be run along the very edge to secure the threads.
- Unless the canvas is to be hemmed first, as for the rug we show, at least 2" of bare canvas should normally be allowed outside of any design, to allow for blocking and sewing or mounting.
- Canvas should normally be worked so that the selvage falls at the side as it is worked.
- One should learn to work at an even tension that takes the slack out of the yarn but does not pull it. Working too tightly tends to draw the whole canvas out of shape.
- In starting a new thread, a few stitches should be taken through the unworked canvas where the first new stitches being made will cover it. No knots, please.
- In finishing a thread, it should be worked back on the underside into the stitches just completed. By starting and finishing as described, if it is ever necessary to take out stitches, work on either side will not be disturbed. ■ Needlepoint should always be finished by blocking, as it usually distorts some in working. If it becomes soiled, it also needs to be gently washed in cold-water soap (no wringing) before blocking. Make a brown-paper pattern of the shape the piece was intended to be. Place pattern over drawing board or other tackable surface. Thoroughly dampen needlepoint and lay it face down on the pattern. Using long, rustproof thumbtacks, beginning at the center point on each side, adjust piece to the pattern, placing tacks about an inch apart through the unworked border—not the stitchery. Allow to dry thoroughly. If the piece has become badly out of shape in working, and is not to be held firmly in place as for upholstery, you may wish to size it either with rabbit's-foot glue sizing (art-supply store), or thinned-out latex cement, such as is frequently used to back hooked rugs.

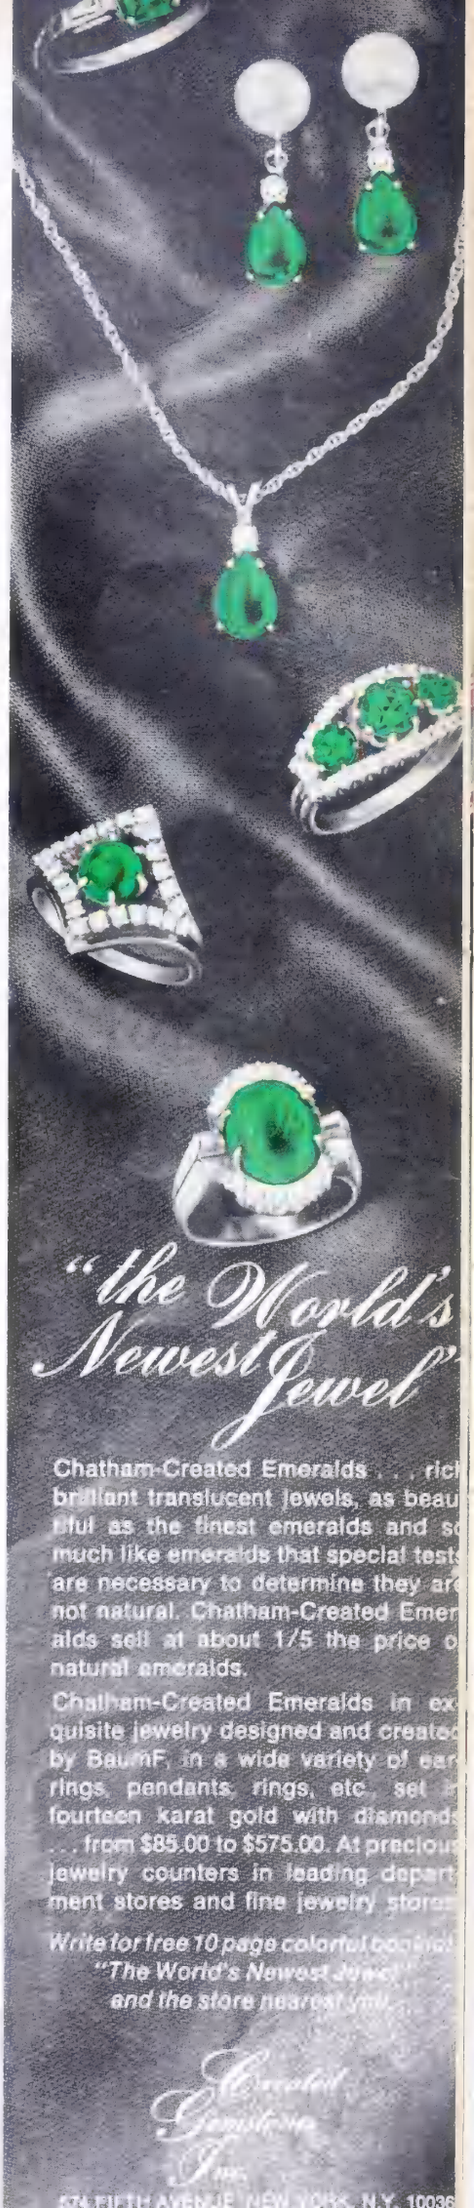
wines, including the quinine-flavored drinks (Dubonnet, St. Raphaël, Byrrh, and others), sweet Italian-type vermouth, Port, the Cognac-fortified sweet white wine called Pineau des Charentes, and French vermouth or white wine sweetened with black currant syrup, Crème de Cassis. The latter mixture constitutes a native French cocktail, named for the good Canon Kir of Dijon, who liked to sweeten his wine. But the Kir must be made with white wine, not vermouth, because, alors, it's a Burgundian invention enfin, and why promote the product of a foreign province when you can patronize home industry. I well remember the raised eyebrows when I thoughtlessly asked for a vermouth Cassis at the Hôtel de la Poste in Beaune. It was as though I had asked for a glass of milk; they knew what it was, and had it, but couldn't imagine why anyone should want to order it. I switched to a Kir.

THE Italian preference has been for bittersweet drinks ever since Antonio Carpano of Turin invented vermouth in 1786. To please his customers who wanted it more bitter than sweet, he offered Punt e Mes, a point (a measure) of vermouth and half a point of additional bitters. One of today's most popular Italian drinks is Campari bitters, drunk, as so many apéritifs are, with two or three chips of ice (the advantage of such a few chips over our big "rocks" is that you can sip slowly and your drink won't get too diluted), or with soda.

In both France and Italy an apéritif is normally unaccompanied by food. This may prove to be an impractical model if America becomes a nation of apéritif drinkers. The rationale is good: you want to sharpen your appetite for the meal to follow, not to blunt the edge of it, and to keep your taste sensitive. At either lunch or dinner you will be served a first course, an hors d'oeuvre or pasta or soup; and a lot of cocktail-party food preceding this would simply be too much. At most, when the dinner is quite important and the pre-dinner drinking prolonged, you will nibble on what the French call amuse-gueules, tidbits that —like the apéritif itself—stimulate the appetite without satiating it. Cheese straws, a few almonds, or olives, finger-size canapés—no more.

Other nations have other habits. Your guests may be so used to a lot of food with their opening drinks that they'd feel disoriented and unloved without it. And you may prefer to simplify your dinner-table service to the point where finger food counts as a first course of hors d'oeuvres variés. There is precedent. You'd have a hard time ordering sherry in Spain without being given, as a matter of course, a tiny plate of olives, bits of cheese, cubes of ham or salami. When their apéritif is vermouth or natural wine, the Spanish like to nibble on crusty broiled shrimps, shrimps steamed with garlic, crayfish, mussels, clams, and all their small cousins, little skewers of lamb or pork, marinated kidneys —everything a Spanish bar calls tapas. A generous sampling of tapas makes a meal, or at least a full first course, not just something to tantalize your hunger. Perhaps this is the American way.



OR another example: If you have a taste for Pernod or Pastis (which the French consider apéritifs because they are drunk before meals, although their strength places them in the class of whiskey or gin-and-tonic), then you might like to consider the way the Arabs accompany their licorice or anise-flavored drinks—with meza. Meza is a selection of appetizers that can be as simple as a few oil-cured olives and fresh cheese, or as elaborate (at the beginning of a formal dinner, or to pass an indolent afternoon) as 20 or 30 small plates of caviar, smoked fish, highly seasoned meats, stuffed vegetables, chick peas with oil, salads, pickles, white beans, spinach, cheese pastries, and many other delicacies. Incidentally, the aroma of wormwood in Pernod, as in vermouth, comes from the flowers of the plant, not from the poisonous leaves that were formerly used to make absinthe.

If you want to serve a variety of appetizers and regard them as the first course of your dinner, this might be the best time to choose a natural white wine as your apéritif. Try a full-bodied Riesling from Germany, Alsace, California, or New York, or a more delicate and wholly delightful Swiss white wine such as Yvorne, Fendant de Sion, Dézaley, or St. Saphorin. (The Swiss themselves consume their wines mainly as apéritifs, by the glass in bars and cafés.) Or why not set the tone of your dinner party with the note of exhilaration that comes from Champagne—and revive the tired hostess to boot? If you serve wine as your apéritif, you can allow time for your guests to have a second drink before dinner and not worry about their going to table unable to enjoy the fine food and wine to follow. Natural and sparkling wines have only the alcohol that nature ferments into them (12 percent on the average), while fortified wines average 18 percent, compared to whiskies, which range from 40 to 50 percent.

In choosing among the many fortified wines, sample all that you can and repeat the ones that appeal to your palate. Remember to allow for differences in taste when they are drunk straight and in mixtures. The classic dry vermouth from France, Noilly Prat, which is light and very slightly bitter, is a favorite both ways. Another good French dry vermouth to drink straight (meaning chilled or with chips of ice) is a more highly-flavored one. Boissière, which has a suspicion of raspberry in its aroma. This delicate quality succumbs, however, before the overpowering strength of most gins, so you may be unable to taste it in a dry Martini. Boissière also makes a vermouth called Chambraise, which is flavored with wild strawberries (perhaps the only really successful strawberry drink—and this one is strong enough to survive in a Martini. So you can try Boissière Chambraise straight as an apéritif, then dazzle your cocktail-loving friends with a strawberry-tini.

Among sweet vermouths to drink straight, Carpano, both regular and Punt e Mes, is in a flavor class by itself. The two favorite sweet vermouths from Italy, Cinzano and Martini & Rossi, are somewhat lighter, both equally good straight and in cocktails such as Manhattans or either of the two excellent Campari-based mixtures that have recently gained favor, the Negroni (gin, Campari, sweet vermouth—one-third each) or the Americano (half Campari, half sweet vermouth). Cinzano manufactures a sweet white vermouth called "Cin" that's very good with a splash of soda.

Of the fortified sweet red wines, Dubonnet has long been the most popular, so popular that it's now made in America. From France we get St. Raphaël, Byrrh, and red Lillet, all meant to be served from the chilled bottle or with chips of ice. Lillet also comes in a lighter-flavored orange-color version, fashionable now in Paris and New York, drunk with ice and Perrier water or soda. It's very much a ladies' drink, low in alcohol when so diluted. (Another time-honored French ladies' drink, by the way, is white wine and soda, like the German Spritzer but with more emphasis on the soda. This treatment doesn't improve the flavor of the wine, but it gives you a kind of false Champagne with very little alcohol.)

Sherry has become so popular that you already know your guests will like it. And you know that you should offer them a manzanilla or fino (moderately chilled, so as not to kill the flavor) if they like it dry, an amontillado or oloroso if they prefer sweet. "Nutty" is probably a better word than sweet; amontillado reminds some people of filberts, oloroso of walnuts. It is said that amontillado fosters brilliant ideas and brings wisdom to the spirit, while oloroso makes an ideal sherry to drink first, because it comforts the stomach and conditions you for other sherries to follow. Take your choice. But please be sure to save the cream sherry for dessert.

When it comes to Madeira, you can have the fun of serving your guests something really "new." This is a curious state of affairs, for Madeira used to be America's most popular drink in Colonial days and into the early 19th Century. An 1801 wine order for the White House included five pipes of Madeira (large barrels holding roughly 3,000 bottles altogether), one pipe of sherry, 540 bottles of Sauternes, and 400 bottles of claret. "Mr. Jefferson's salary did not support him while he was President," his overseer has recorded. Today this is the drink virtually nobody knows. We import less than 15,000 gallons of Madeiras a year. Yet these extraordinary wines offer a range of fascinating tastes from very dry to sweet, making them suitable to many occasions. (And they are indispensable in fine French cooking.) The Sercial is the grape that gives the finest dry Madeiras: Rainwater is the name for the lightest and palest.

Addicts of very dry Martinis tell a story about the club member who instructed the barman to mix his drink with straight gin, and just whisper "vermouth" over the glass. He tasted it, grimaced, and when asked what was wrong, replied, "I think you said it too loud." Perhaps, on the contrary, we haven't been saying it loud enough, or at the right time and place. ■ appears, in Northern gardens, before the snow is off the ground. It grows six to eight inches tall, and the flowers last two to three weeks. In moist humus soil in light shade, the bulbs will thrive and increase in number every year. They will grow in less than ideal conditions, but will not increase as rapidly.

Winter aconite (Eranthus hyemalis) is another hardy performer which may bloom before the snow is gone. The showy, rounded flowers, about three inches high, are a sunny buttercup yellow neatly set off with a fringed collar of green. Botanically speaking, winter aconite is a tuber, but it's planted as if it were a bulb. It will tolerate considerable shade, and, when established, increases by reseeding.

Pushkinia (Pushkinia scilloides libanotica) has white flowers striped or shaded with a soft blue, which appear in late March and early April. Petals are pointed, and the upright flowers have a decorative ruffled look. They grow to about six inches tall and do well in sun or shade.

Two more to naturalize

Trout lily and fritillaria are taller than the other minor bulbs and can be used with the low-growing early tulips. They are also lovely planted in drifts in the light shade of a woodland garden.

Trout lily or dog's-tooth violet (Erythronium) comes in mixed colors of yellow, purple, pink, and white, with various markings. These small April-blooming lily-like beauties do wonders to brighten a shady corner. The flowers grow eight to ten inches tall and the handsome marbled foliage is attractive from early spring to fall. It does best in cool, moist soil.

Checkered lily (Fritillaria meleagris) is a charming small flower. The pendant bell-like blossoms, on ten- to 12-inch stems, have fascinating checkered markings in greens, browns, and purples. F.m. alba is white with faint markings. Checkered lily must have well-drained soil and ample moisture. This means that frequent watering is required in the dry seasons.

F. meleagris is not to be confused with the stately crown imperial (F. imperalis), which grows to three feet. This striking plant, incidentally, is impervious to the attack of rodents and such and, in fact, drives them away.

When to plant

In climates where freezing weather marks the end of the gardening season, spring-blooming bulbs must be planted in the fall. Where freezing is not a problem the timing is not so urgent, but they should be planted as soon as you get them.

In warm climates, where you do not get at least six weeks of temperatures under 45 degrees, do not plant bulbs in the fall. To give them the cooling period they require, put them in a paper bag and store them in the refrigerator (not the freezer), where the temperature is about 40 degrees. Leave them for six weeks, and plant the same day you take them out. They will flower to perfection. But they will not bloom a second year. In warm climates, a hardy bulb must be considered an annual.

The proper soil

The perfect soil for bulbs would be loose enough in texture to allow them to push upward freely, sandy enough for good aeration and drainage, and with sufficient humus to retain necessary food and water. These specifications are not really so stringent—any good garden loam will qualify.

Most bulbs will do well in less than perfect soil. But they will not tolerate poor drainage. If the soil is spongy and holds water too long, or if there's a clay subsoil that keeps water near the surface, the bulbs may not survive.

At the other extreme, if the soil is too sandy to retain food and water at the root level, the bulbs will decline for want of nourishment.

The proper food

In reasonably good soil, there's more chance of overfeeding than underfeeding a bulb planting. Bear in mind that within a bulb is all the food it needs for the first year's growth and flower. In a reasonable situation, it will continue to bloom for years without supplemental food, although it will diminish in size and vigor.

Plant food is used to benefit the bulbs in the second and succeeding years. This is why slow-acting fertilizers are always used. A good bulb food can be made of equal parts bone meal and rich top soil. Dig the planting holes two inches deeper than required, put in the enriched soil to bring it to the proper depth, water gently, and set the bulb firmly in place. This puts the fertilizer exactly where it's needed. In future seasons, when you think the bulbs need further sustenance, dust the planting area thoroughly with bone meal or a 5-10-10 commercial fertilizer, and water it in. Never use a fertilizer with high nitrogen content. It produces foliage at the expense of flowers. And never use manure.

The proper exposure

Most bulbs do best in partial shade—as under tall deciduous trees, or where there's shade in the morning only. The more sun they have, the earlier they bloom and the more vigorously the bulbs will develop. The more shade they have (up to a point), the longer the blooms will last. The best exposure is the balance that promotes healthy growth and long bloom.

How to plant

If you're planting a bed of bulbs, it's best to handle it as a unit. Remove the soil to the proper depth, take out rocks and debris, and cultivate the planting bed. Fertilize the root area as recommended, set the bulbs in place exactly as you want them to come up, and carefully cover the bed with top soil.

For informal groupings, you may dig separate holes for each bulb with a bulb-planter or trowel. To naturalize the bulbs in drifts, try casting them out by the handful and planting them pretty much where they fall.

For mass effects, whether naturalized or in formal beds, the distance between bulbs should be two to 2½ times their width.

The bulbs increase in number over the years. They will eventually become crowded and require thinning out. In the early fall, as soon as the foliage has dried completely, dig the bulbs with a spading fork, separate them, and replant immediately. In five years or so, most bulbs double in number.

The problems are few—but serious

If you live where there are many squirrels, chipmunks, rabbits, moles, gophers, or field mice, you'll soon discover that to them a bulb is a delicacy. Least susceptible are the daffodils, snowdrops, and scillas. The tulips, crocus, and others can best be protected with wire mesh. Dig the planting hole the size you want, line it to a depth of eight or ten inches with aluminum screening, and plant the bulbs within this area. For naturalized plantings, make a basketlike container to surround each grouping.

Where squirrels are a problem, you should also cover the top of the planting bed with wire until the ground freezes so they can't dig up the bulbs. Rabbits do their major depredation in the spring. They relish the tender new shoots. A collar of hardware cloth, about eight inches in diameter and eight inches high around the plant will protect it. When the leaves are fully developed, the bulbs are safe. Or you might like to try one of the various animal repellents.

Winter care

Where temperatures drop to the 20's or below, bulbs should be mulched with eight to ten inches of straw or leaves after the ground has frozen. This helps prevent thawing and refreezing, which heaves the soil and can damage the roots. The mulch also keeps the subsoil from freezing. This is important, because a layer of ice underground can trap moisture melting from the top in spring and rot the bulbs. When danger of frost has passed, the mulch should be removed so the sun can warm the ground and trigger again the cycle of bloom. ■

areas where winter snow or icing may temporarily make passage hazardous or impossible.

It may be possible to set up joint parking in cooperation with neighbors. Where two houses are on the same drive, or driveways adjoin, a community area can sometimes be established. There are problems both social and legal in joint ownership or development of property. These should not be overlooked when making any such arrangements.

Of course there are times when no amount of parking you could ever provide would be enough. For these special occasions—a wedding, a once-a-year party—our notes at the end of this article tell what can be done.

The important angles

An average car requires a minimum parking space 8′ wide and 17′ long, plus room for getting in and out. The sharper the angle at which it is parked, the less in-and-out room it needs. Parking at a 90-degree angle, it requires 21′ extra for turning in. At a 60-degree angle, it needs only 17′, and at a 45-degree angle a mere 12′. But the sharper the angle, the more width the car occupies. At a 90-degree angle, three cars can park in a space 24′ wide. At a 60-degree angle, the same three cars require 36′, and at 45 degrees, 46′.

Where space is available, it is better to increase the parking allowance for each car. Increasing the width of the parking space from 8′ to 9½′ means no car door need ever strike against the car adjoining (some car models require 4′ door-swinging space on either side). Ample clearance also makes it easier to walk between cars, and is especially appreciated by anyone carrying luggage.

Parallel parking is an added bonus of a wide driveway. A driveway wide enough for two cars can provide parking space along its entire length, but there should be a place to turn around at the end, or an exit there. Otherwise, cars may get blocked in or have to back out.

It's most pleasant if guests don't have to step out into the weather when they've parked. Years ago, the chauffeur would deposit guests under a porte-cochere and then drive off to park. For the occasional guest, the porte-cochere is still a valid device. The guest can leave the car right there. For larger numbers, a more useful arrangement is a covered walkway extending from the parking area to the front door. (Just another reason for having parking as close to the front door as possible.)

Shade and shelter

Orientation of parking is important in any climate, but especially where summers are long and hot. Take advantage of existing trees, or plant fast-growing species to provide shade. Or use a drive-through carport, attached to the house, to shelter guest cars from sun and weather. Awnings, attached to the house or erected as a freestanding pavilion, are other means of shading.

Besides providing shade, trees can also help shield parking areas from both the house and street. Developing a parking area can thus increase privacy. If shrubbery is used as a parking screen, keep it low to avoid hampering visibility. If the house is on a rise, parking placed at a lower level will be below normal sight lines and out of view (even without plantings).

Paving color should be neither so light it glares nor so dark it stores heat. Black paving can continue to radiate heat after the sun has set. Near the house, a large area of such paving can be troublesome.

Most parking areas have frequent nighttime use. Don't attempt to illuminate a large area from a single source. Glare will result. Many small lights, of mushroom or path variety, give the best results. Particularly good are new low-voltage lights. It is possible to have six such lights on a 150-foot cable, and because the current used is a harmless 12 volts, installation doesn't require the services of an electrician.

With an electronic device, or a cable switch like that used near filling-station gas pumps, it is possible to have driveway and parking area lights come on automatically whenever anyone enters the drive.

The driveway

The driveway is an inseparable part of the parking picture. No driveway should be less than 8′ wide, or 10′ wide if used for backing. At curves, a driveway should be at least 11′ wide, and the curve should have a minimum radius of 18′. It's easy to determine a radius with a rope attached to a stake.

Draw a circle with a 30′ rope radius, and you have the minimum outside dimension for a circular driveway. Where the driveway meets the street, it should flare at a 3′ to 5′ radius. Preferably, driveway should meet the street at a right angle. It is safest and easiest to negotiate.

The maximum recommended slope for a driveway is 3 inches in a foot, but a 4-inch slope (a 15-percent grade) is acceptable. For safety, there should be one car-length without grade both at the garage and where the driveway meets street or sidewalk.

For drainage, a driveway may be high along its center line and slope to the edges. This "crown" should be a maximum of 6″ in a 10′-wide driveway. Where a driveway crosses a ridge, the maximum peak should be 6″ in 10′. Otherwise you may scrape car bottom.

Color and texture

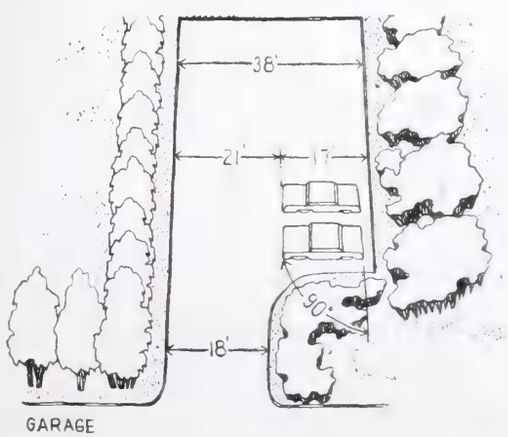
The motor court is a garden element. Its paving offers an opportunity to add drama and importance to the house entry. In some cases, the driveway may also act as the entry walk.

Pockets of planting and open spaces for trees are factors in creating the total effect. So are color and texture of paving.

Texture may simply be swirls created when troweling concrete, or corduroylike striations made by pulling a broom over the freshly smoothed surface. One of the most attractive textures is exposed aggregate, a rough surface that lays bare and dramatizes the stones in the concrete. Small pebbles may be imbedded in the paving surface. Or large, water-washed stones may be hand-placed in new concrete to create an informal cobblestone look.

Black asphalt combined with areas of tan-pebbled concrete effectively exploit both subtle coloring and texture. Dividers of redwood 2-by-4's set in concrete can bring the rhythm of plaid design to a large area. Tile and brick are other good divider and border materials.

Concrete or flagstone squares, set with 3″-wide joints planted in grass or dichondra, can bring an effective incursion of greenery into driveway or parking areas. Planted to ground cover, "oil-drip openings" in car spaces can alleviate what might be a maintenance problem and further accentuate the garden look.



The really big happening

For the parking area that is completely disguised, consider the case of the homeowner who wanted to provide parking for parties without creating an area that would be idle most of the time. He put a roll-away fence on his asphalt tennis courts, and accommodated 30 cars.

For that rare, outsize affair when you may be confronted with the problem of what to do with 40 or even a hundred cars, here is what can be done.

You may wish to call upon your local police department to handle the traffic and see that cars are parked safely. For the occasion, you may get the use of neighbors' driveways and parking areas, church lots, empty fields, or whatever other resource is available. The police usually like to have three or four days' advance notice, and a typical charge is $5 per hour, with a $10 minimum.

Where parking must be done an inconvenient distance from the house, valet parking can be useful. If teenagers aren't available to park the cars, cab drivers can often be hired for the purpose. For security, cars remotely parked should not be left unattended. ■

An area for right-angle parking, such as this one, may be placed at the front, rear, or side of house.

Trifle in the Grand Manner

Pound cake (½ pound, your own or commercial)
¼ cup sherry
¼ cup Cognac
½ cup strawberry or raspberry jam
2 cups Crème Anglaise (below)
1 cup heavy cream
¼ cup slivered, toasted almonds
Angelica

Cut the pound cake into suitable pieces, and soak in the combined sherry and Cognac. Spread each piece with some of the jam, place in a large serving bowl and allow to stand for a couple of hours. Meanwhile make the Crème Anglaise.

Pour the hot Crème over the soaked cake and chill.

Just before serving, whip the cream, cover the cake, and stick the almonds all over the surface. Finish it in gala style with slivers of green angelica. Serves 8.

Crème Anglaise

½ cup sugar
4 egg yolks
1 teaspoon cornstarch
1¾ cups milk
½ teaspoon almond extract

Beat the sugar into the egg yolks, and continue beating until mixture is very thick and creamy, pale yellow, and makes ribbons when it falls back on itself. Best, if possible, done with an electric beater or in the electric mixer. Beat in the cornstarch.

Heat the milk until a film shines on top. Don't boil. While beating constantly, add the hot milk to the yolk mixture in a thin, steady stream. Place over very low heat and cook, stirring constantly with a wooden spatula, until sauce thickens just enough to coat the spoon. Note: Sauce should never come to a simmer. Take off the heat, beat for a minute or two to cool, then beat in the almond extract.

Coffee Cherry Mold

1 can (29-ounce size) pitted dark, sweet cherries
2 envelopes unflavored gelatin
½ cup sugar
4 tablespoons instant coffee
¼ teaspoon salt

Drain the cherries and cut in half. Measure the syrup and add enough water to make 3½ cups. Mix gelatin, sugar, instant coffee, and salt together in a saucepan. Add 1 cup of the cherry liquid, place over a low heat, stirring constantly, until gelatin and sugar are dissolved. Take off the heat and stir in the remainder of the liquid. Chill until mixture is the consistency of egg whites, then stir in the cherries. Pour into a 6-cup mold or bowl.

Serve with Crème Anglaise sprinkled with Pralin. Serves 8.

To make the Pralin: Stir 1½ cups sugar with ½ cup water over medium heat with a wooden spatula until sugar is dissolved. Add at once 2 cups blanched almonds or filberts (skins rubbed off), and cook until the syrup is golden. Take off the heat, pour onto a lightly oiled plate. When cold, break into pieces and pulverize in the electric blender.

This delicious Pralin keeps well stored in a screw-top jar and is lovely in desserts, sauces, over ice cream, or as a flavoring in frostings and cake fillings.

Nesselrode Pudding

1 can (8¾-ounce size) chestnut purée
¼ cup Malaga or sherry wine
1 recipe Crème Anglaise
¾ cup heavy cream, whipped
½ cup sugar
½ cup currants
¼ cup seedless raisins

Stir the chestnut purée and sherry into the Crème Anglaise while it is still warm. Allow to cool, then combine with the whipped cream. Place in a container in the freezer of the refrigerator until it is almost firm, giving it an occasional stir.

Meanwhile, combine the sugar with ½ cup of water in a saucepan. Stir over low heat until sugar is dissolved, add the currants and raisins, and cook until they plump up and the syrup thickens. Take the custard out of the freezer, stir in the fruit mixture, and pack into a melon or charlotte mold, cover tightly, and return to the freezer until very firm.

To serve, unmold on a well-chilled platter. Garnish with marrons glacés and bouquets of whipped cream. Serves 6 to 8.

Pump Room Chocolate-Rum Cake

The world-celebrated "Pump," as it's known to the initiated, in the Ambassador East, Chicago, reopened recently after a refurbishing, to the delight of the many who call this famous restaurant home.

4 large eggs
½ cup sugar
½ teaspoon vanilla
Pinch of salt
½ cup sifted cake flour
½ stick (⅓ pound) sweet butter, melted
Chocolate Butter Cream (see below)

Grease the sides and bottoms of two round 9-inch cake pans. Line the bottoms with circles of waxed paper so they fit exactly. Set aside.

Combine eggs and sugar in a large (at least 3 quarts) mixing bowl (not metal). Place bowl over, not in, a pan of hot, not boiling, water and beat steadily until very light and fluffy and mixture will hold peaks when you lift up the beater. About 15 minutes. By all means, use an electric beater, if you have one. Take off the heat.

Fold in the vanilla and salt. Sift the flour over the mixture a little at a time, folding in carefully but thoroughly after each addition with a spatula. When all the flour has been folded in, add the butter in driblets, mixing it as you add.

Pour into the prepared pan, place in a preheated 350° F. oven, and bake for 35 minutes or until cakes are brown and a toothpick comes out dry when inserted in the center.

Turn the cakes out at once on wire racks and cool.

While cakes are cooling, make a simple syrup with ½ cup of water and ½ cup of sugar. Stir until dissolved, then bring up to a boil. Take off the heat and add 2 to 3 tablespoons of rum. Set aside.

Chocolate Butter Cream:

1 pound (4 sticks) sweet butter, softened
2 pounds confectioners' sugar
6 squares unsweetened chocolate, melted
¾ cup very strong coffee concentrate

Cream the butter with an electric beater or, better, in the electric mixer. When soft and fluffy, gradually add the confectioners' sugar, beating constantly until you have a smooth cream. Stir in the chocolate and coffee concentrate until thoroughly blended. Now back to the cake.

Brush the sides of the cakes to eliminate any surplus crumbs. Then split each layer in half carefully with a long knife. Sprinkle the cut side of each layer with the rum syrup. Put the layers together with Butter Cream in between, then cover the sides and top with remaining Butter Cream.

Honey Pecan Torte

1 cup (10 to 15 slices) finely crushed zwieback crumbs*
1 3-ounce can (1 cup ground) pecans, very finely ground*
2 teaspoons baking powder
1 teaspoon cinnamon
¼ teaspoon salt
7 eggs, separated
½ cup sugar
2 teaspoons vanilla

Thoroughly grease a 10-inch ring mold pan or an angel-cake pan (one that doesn't come apart). Set aside.

Mix all the dry ingredients except sugar together in a generous bowl. Combine the egg yolks with the sugar, and beat until very thick and creamy. Stir the dry ingredients and the vanilla into the yolk mixture thoroughly. Beat the egg whites until they stand in glossy peaks when you hold up the beater. Add about a third of the first mixture and whip it in vigorously. Fold in the remaining whites carefully. Pour into the prepared pan and bake in a preheated 325° F. oven for 30 minutes or until a toothpick plunged into it comes out dry.

While the torte bakes, mix together: 3 cups of water, 1½ cups granulated sugar, and a 12-ounce jar of honey in a large, heavy saucepan. Stir until the sugar has dissolved. Bring to a boil, then boil 30 minutes or until the syrup is reduced to about half. (Skim off any scum that rises to the surface as the syrup cooks.) Add ⅓ cup of dark rum when you take it off the stove.

Turn the hot cake out on a cake rack (if it seems to stick, run a thin knife around the edges). Wash the pan in cold water, dry, and return the cake to the pan. Pour the hot syrup over it and allow it to soak in. It should stand about 6 hours or overnight.

To serve, turn out on a large serving platter, sprinkle with a little more rum, and garnish with whipped cream or serve the cream on the side.

Vacherin

8 egg whites
1 pound superfine sugar

Step 1. Grease a large cookie sheet with shortening, then flour lightly (a mere film), dumping off any excess. Make three 7-inch circles with the tip of a knife on the sheet, using a cake pan, or anything round you can use as a guide. Beat the egg whites in a very large bowl with an electric beater or, preferably, in an electric mixer, until they are stiff, shiny, and stand in firm peaks when you hold up the beater. At this point, begin to add the sugar, gradually, beating constantly until you have a smooth meringue.

Step 2. With a pastry bag and a large tube (size 8 or 10), cover one of the circles with a thick (about an inch) layer of the meringue, just short of the edge (meringues spread a little on cooking). Now, using the same tube, make a double layer of meringue, on top of each other, around only the edges of the two remaining circles. Set remaining meringue aside.

Place the meringues in a preheated 200° F. oven for about 40 minutes or until they are dry and firm. They should be perfectly white. Take out of the oven, with a spatula, and carefully lift the full circle of baked meringue onto another cookie sheet. Arrange the two layers on top, "gluing" them all together with dabs of the uncooked meringue.

ALICE UCHIYAMA

Step 3. Beat up the uncooked meringue, and frost sides and top of the Vacherin, just as you would a cake, with a flexible metal spatula. With a small tube in the pastry bag, pipe any design you like on the sides or follow our photograph on page 282.

Place the Vacherin in a preheated 200° F. oven, turn off the heat, and leave it in the warm oven until it is absolutely dry. At least an hour. Once made, the Vacherin will keep indefinitely if properly protected.

To serve, fill with ice cream, topping it with whipped cream and a scattering of candied violets. Cut and serve just as you would a cake. Serves about 8. ■

Tucked into the era's fine quilting, guests were awakened for a breakfast of meat, tea, and coffee at seven. Passing strangers were also welcome, put up in the right wing, which was called the Hall and kept in readiness for visitors at any time. The latchstring seems always to have been out, even to the purely inquisitive. In 1794, the master of the house wrote to his estate manager, "I have no objection to any sober or orderly person gratifying their curiosity."

Lately on a summer day we gratified our own curiosity (for about the sixth time) and again came away convinced that Mount Vernon is as much a demonstration in household management as it is a national shrine, and so belongs on every hostess's travel list. It deserves much more time for perusal than the amount permitted by the moderate-to-fast shuffle of the long tourist line in high summer season, but since the place is open every day of the year, from nine-o'clock to five-ish, a fall, winter, or spring visit can provide the leisure needed to get with the old Martha-George atmosphere. You may have to forego the pleasurable summertime scent of sunbaked boxwood and the quaint old-fashioned borders of tuberose, fuchsia and coreopsis, and the pretty green patchwork of the kitchen gardens, fenced in espaliered fruits. But the lawns and vistas are always lovely, and even in snow-clad winter you may have the added delight of finding tropical shrubs in flower in the greenhouse. Surely off season is unequalled opportunity to examine the 18th-century English, French, and American furnishings, most of which were originally in use, then scatte. l and now retrieved from the families who inherited them. It's a time to see in pure outline the architecture of the house which its master so elegantly designed, including its Palladianisms and colonnades. Note especially the pretty pattern of the white garden fence, referred to as the "palisade," running along the top of the brick garden wall, and wonder why some enterprising stock-fence manufacturer hasn't borrowed George's design. Another benefit of an off-season visit: Your eyes will be spared the sight of the American tourist in warm-weather attire, a sartorial fiasco that makes you doubt if people should really be permitted to choose their own clothes in a democracy.

You could make a day of Mount Vernon for the modest admission fee of 75 cents, lunching in the well-run, government-run tearoom where the costumed waitresses struggle simultaneously with bobbing crinolines and luncheon trays.

Washington

Washington per se gets more interesting with every dip of the excavator's crane, and any adult who thinks of it in terms of a childhood visit remembered has a brand-new city to cope with. If you don't think the space age is here to stay, see the relatively new National Geographic building and the extended Smithsonian Institution. This is also the place to investigate domestic building and remodeling, the South East section now developing into a Jordan-almond community of face-lifted, imaginatively rejuvenated Victorian houses, almost as atmospheric as the revivals have been in Georgetown and Alexandria. New, gilt-edged high-rise apartment buildings are scraping the skies everywhere, one of the most attractive of the lot the Shoreham West, directly linked with our old favorite, the Shoreham Hotel, which has long since expanded to include a motor inn. Hotel guests looking down on the apartment-building roof, however, find that they're peering into a garden, craftily designed to camouflage the mundane roof and the outcroppings of pipes and skylights that usually top off high buildings. Transient guests may also use the new sauna.

Like the city itself, the Shoreham seems to be going through continual renewal, the guest rooms constantly being refreshed with new furnishings and color schemes. During bouts with the sight-seeing schedule, home-conscious guests might well take note of the simplicity and effectiveness of one basic guest-room formula which we found attractive—the wallpaper a black Renaissance print on white, the carpeting a sharp green, red, or gold, the bedspreads white. Service around these parts seems to

Bermuda

It is not surprising that Mount Vernon should call to mind Bermuda. That little taste of England in the modes and manners of the new country is the same flavor that clings so nostalgically to the spanking white, coral-roofed, mid-ocean island that shared a great deal of the same history as the U.S.A. The little "dependencies" of Mount Vernon, the tiny one-room cottages with the "Howard Johnson" peaked roof, are counterparts of the buttery, that distinguishing piece of picture-postcard architecture, which was actually young semitropical Bermuda's most vital utility—storehouse, refrigerator, and, like all the distinctive lime-washed, stepped-down roofs, tantamount to a water filter and catchment. But even if their chore was simply to punctuate the hibiscus-hedged lanes and create sudden breathtaking Kodak shots for honeymooners to add to their memory books, the butteries of Bermuda would have done their noble job.

Bermuda, its old horse-and-buggy days often recalled with much headshaking by the elders in our midst, is in reality as indestructibly white, shell-pink, and turquoise-blue as ever. No matter that it is now a popular meeting place for conferences, almost no time by air from any mainland metropolis, there is still here a mysterious aura of the past—suggestions of swashbucklers, pirates, men of war, lace-cuffed governors, ladies in dimity, roads brightened only by moonlight and the glitter of the sea. And it is curious that resort-seekers have only lately realized that the climate practically defies the seasons. Rarely does the weather turn ugly, and golf, tennis, cycling, and the joys of loafing are always feasible. Thus November through March, now referred to as the "Rendezvous Season" by the people who manage Bermuda's public festivities, is a likely vacation time. It starts November 5th, with the traditional fireworks of Guy Fawkes Day, and thenceforth every week offers some kind of special activity, from events celebrating Bermuda's picturesque colonial history in the "big towns" of Hamilton and St. George to fashion shows of international goods at bargain prices. Sports buffs, note the following slate of wintertime tournaments: Invitation Tennis Weeks, November 6th to November 19th, at the Coral Beach Club, visitor entries welcome; the whole month of November open for competition in the annual Game Fishing Tournament, for landers of wahoo, marlin, tuna, bonefish, and similar large denizens of the Bermuda deep; Sunfish Regatta on Harrington Sound, New Year's weekend; Annual Goodwill Golf Tournament, December 6th to 10th, pro-amateur club foursomes from Canada, U.S., and England competing; the more cerebral Bermuda Bridge Club Sectional Tournament, January 29th to February 5th.

As one who remembers the horse-drawn days when the coral island didn't have a motor-assisted bike to bless itself with and the present Belmont Golf Course was a tangle of domestic banana groves and oleanders, it's reassuring to know that the Talbot Brothers are still roving the night spots, playing at a different hotel each night, just as they seem to have done since time began.

The Ace of Clubs is still in high gear, now given to boy singers with shoulder-length hair; Tom Moore's is still the place to stop for lobster dinner or for a Stirrup Cup before you take the plane home; and the tower of the Hamilton cathedral seen across the harbor from a Warwick parish lawn still gives the town the look of Canterbury in the tropics.

That's a sight we first saw from the Belmont, which is now completely metamorphosed, air conditioned, equipped with Olympic all-year-round swimming pool, water ballets, barbecues, an 18-hole golf course, and a new name, The Belmont Golf and Country Club. It has become one of three sister hotels, which give you three quite different kinds of accommodation. Sisters are the sleek Bermudiana in the town of Hamilton, which is so equipped with big-city accoutrements that it's like a little town in itself, and Harmony Hall, in Paget Parish, a pink-and-white cottage, typical of Bermuda's distinctive guest houses, where one has more the feeling of being at home with a family than in a hotel. All three share the Belmont Golf Course and a beach club on the South Shore, or ocean side of the island, with transportation to the briny provided. The threesome also enjoys an interchange arrangement whereby guests may take dinner in any hotel of the group. For rates: Robert Reid Associates, 1270 Avenue of the Americas, New York 10020.

Another bit of Bermudian nostalgia brought up-to-date with a sparkle—the Princess Hotel in Hamilton, everything new but the name, overlooking the harbor, terraced in gardens, with all the resort casualness of swimming-pool sunworship by day, night-club glamour after dark, the town and its shopping lures at the doorstep. All this, with a new wing being built. Golfers and beach buffs have the facilities of the Southhampton Golf and Beach Club, to which they are toted by regular transportation. For more details: Hetland & Stevens, 211 East 43rd St., New York 10017. For more about Bermuda in general: Bermuda News Bureau, 610 Fifth Ave., New York 10020.

London

Quite true, the town is swinging in ways it never did before when the biggest shockers in a sightseer's life were Madame Tussaud's waxworks and the Tower of London (and high time to take another look at both of them, come to think of it). But it is really not precisely the case that only those in mini-mini-skirts or pipe-stem Carnaby Street trousers now feel at home in the shadow of Big Ben. Old folks of twenty-five and thirty report that it's fun to lunch at the Hungry Horse, 196 Fulham Road, and have discothèque dinner at the "in" Annabelle's, 44 Berkeley Square, but the meal they remember most lovingly is dinner at Chez Solange, 35 Cranbourn Street, at Longacre, near the Leicester Square tube station. It's nostalgically red plush in manner, French bistro in its menu, the spécialité de la maison, Poulet Solange, where chicken meets paprika and mushrooms and turns into something so good it baffles description. Remember: you always reserve tables in advance in London restaurants. London is still too short on hotel accommodations for its own good, fall and winter being as seasonally high for the English as summer is for tourists, so book well in advance if you intend to make the scene at all.

Paris

In Paris there is always a sentimental meal to be taken at the Grand Vefour, 17 Rue Beaujolais, in the Palais Royal. All the greats of French literature seem to have eaten here from Balzac to Colette, who actually lived upstairs in the Palais Royal, and whether or not the family affairs of the Olivier family (Louis père, and Raymond fils) are stormy, the food is still great and M. Henocq is still the most ingratiating of the haut cuisine sommeliers.

What makes Paris worth the price tag is that service is still part of the scene, and an aura still survives. A hotel that seems to mix atmosphere with sweet reason and a deluxe rating by Michelin is the Napoleon, 40 Avenue Friedland, hardly a hundred yards from the Arc de Triomphe, its balconies overlooking l'Etoile and the Champs Elysées, its restaurant, Chez Pescadou, under the aegis of a Chevalier de Tastevin. ■ may be festive and sparkling, the teenagers less bewildering and Mod than usual, the smaller children clean and beguiling, what of the guest room?

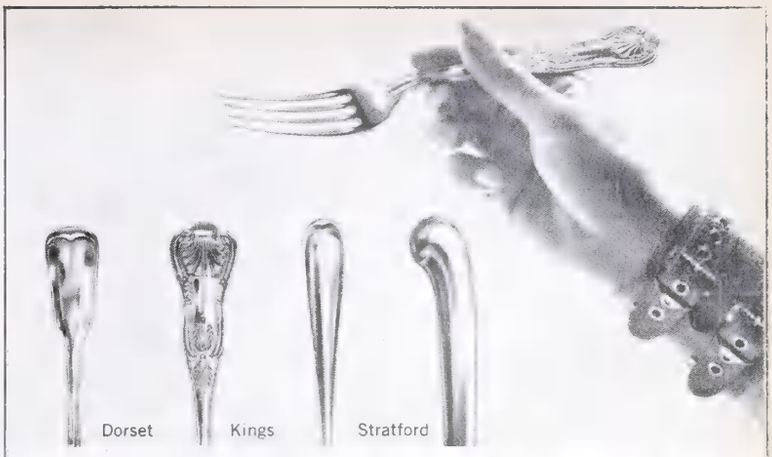
Is it a room complete, a place to unwind, a hideaway, a snuggery, a tonic? A room for relaxing, for reading, for napping, or for pure escape should the rainy days multiply, the festivities and reminiscing pall, or the children grow noisy? Is it a restful room to brace yourselves for events ahead or to recover from the doings behind? Does it have a large measure of privacy, which even the most gregarious need?



The crucial test of your guest room might be your own stern appraisal. Spend a night there, say the knowing ones. As a pretend guest, no one will plan merriment for you, but you may lie abed and ponder the physical facts. Take inventory, and anticipate the problems apt to beset a live-in guest. Not the real—and rare — emergencies, but silly things like a torn hem or a popped button—is there a needle and thread at hand? The preservation of a hairdo for a gala party—a showercap? Or a complete job on the hairdo that's limp and gone—dryer, rollers, pins?

Elementary, you'll say, and you've heard it before but, in this world of bad backs, is the mattress sound? Is there a lamp to read by and something to read? What a treat for a guest to find a little library, to browse among unfamiliar magazines and books — poetry, humor, short stories, mysteries, essays. Agreeable also: A warming throw, light and pretty, and a large, soft pillow or back rest. Two luggage racks save your bedspread from dust and wrinkling. A dressing table with a good mirror, an easy chair or chaise longue; scrap basket; tissues. If the room lacks privacy or the windows face the early morning sun, be sure you have blinds or shades and warn your guests to draw them; an alarm clock; fresh flowers on the night table —always welcoming; and if possible, a telephone, for pity the guest who must make every call within family earshot.

The guest closet should be empty, or nearly so, and well supplied with hangers for coats, dresses, pants, skirts. (How intrusive and prying we feel to find ourselves among the moth-proof bags, trampling among last season's knee boots.) The bureau drawers too should be clear and lined with plastic fabric and kept, always immaculate, without a trace of the last tenant. In a drawer: Aspirin, sewing kit, pins, tissue, cold cream, hand mirror, nail equipment, hairpins, rollers, showercap.

If the guest must share a bathroom with the family, is there an inch of space to call her own, and if she has her own bathroom, are those many inches properly equipped: Extra toothbrushes for the forgetful; toothpaste (to start a fresh tube is nice); razor blades, shaving cream, mouthwash, dental floss, cotton pads, antiseptics, and in

When you set your table with Ellis-Barker sterling... be careful. It's heavy.

Are you as fed up with fly away silver as we are? Silver on which the soup outweighs the spoon? Silver on which the sirloin bends the fork? You're ready to pick up a piece of Ellis-Barker's Rediscovery Sterling — in three patterns of an ancient, weighty order. The dies were laid away decades ago. We missed these great patterns: Kings—Dorset—Stratford. You must have missed them too. See them again at the fine stores listed below. But be careful! These are heavy sterling silver. Lift them; they don't float. Five-piece place settings begin at $48.25.

Write for illustrated leaflet.

America's ~~best~~ most unusual premium wines come from

Please girls ...don't fight over it!

Meier's Ohio State premium wines are available in fine wine shops and retail stores throughout most of the United States, but you may have difficulty locating a few bottles in your city, as the supply is always limited.

We hope you will keep trying.

Did you know that 97 out of 100 people don't know that Ohio produces wines? Yet, Cincinnati is the birthplace of American champagne and today, Meier's at Silverton, operates a huge, modern winery. Meier's wines are produced from premium grapes grown in Meier's own state St. George vineyards, the Lake Erie regions, and in the Ohio Valley vineyards.

the summer, suntan lotion. Also: toilet water, cologne, shaving lotion, and bath powder.

More items for those going all-out: A small Thermos or carafe filled with ice water, an electric travel coffee pot all ready to plug in. (Be sure the socket is handy and free.) What about brandy for bedtime sipping and fruit, with knife and napkin, for bedtime eating?

To make future visits pleasanter for you and your guests, keep a Guest Book. Record briefly—it does not have to be a Boswell's Diary—the arrival and departure dates, favorite menus, likes and dislikes (moderate honesty, we think, is preferable to glum stoicism), and keep a list of requests, transferring them, in our lists below, from Luxuries to Necessities.

Guest Room Checklists

The Bedroom

The Necessities

Luggage rack
Drawer space, preferably lined with plasticized fabric
Closet space with ample coat hangers, dress and skirt hangers, and trouser hangers
Reading lamp with high-wattage bulb
Up-to-date books and magazines
Adequate light at the dressing table
Comfortable bed pillows, two to a person
Pretty bedsheets and pillowcases
Warm blankets in winter, gossamers for summer
Blanket covers, more formal for winter, light and gay for summer
Spanking fresh curtains, bedspreads, draperies, dust ruffles
Check window shades or blinds for workability and privacy
Make sure windows can be easily opened or closed
Clothes brush; shoe shine cloth; black, brown, blue polish
Clean comb and brush
Smoker-type ashtrays
Fresh cigarettes; matches or a cigarette lighter
One table or nest of tables reserved for guests' belongings
Cleansing tissues in a decorated container
Alarm clock, correctly set Wastebaskets, at least two Needles and threads; better still, a little sewing kit (even men sometimes need this) Pin cushion with all types of pins

Not Necessary But Nice

Bowl or two of fresh flowers, naturally
Basket or bowl of fresh fruits, fruit knives and napkins
Carafe or Thermos filled with ice-cold water
Ready-to-plug-in travel coffee pot, cups and such Clock radio
Bed back rest for reading
Extra luggage racks
Knocker on the door
Tie rack on the closet door
Adjustable shoe trees for men and women
Full-length mirror on a door
If closet space is limited, think of using an amusing old wrought-iron coat rack
Flashlight tagged "You're welcome to raid the refrigerator"—and make sure there are tidbits to be raided
Comfortable chair and ottoman, floor lamp
Fluffy, fuzzy bedside rug
Contour hangers
Schedule of local church services (with transportation arranged for those who want to attend)

The Absolute Luxuries

Chaise longue, down comforter, dreamy boudoir pillows
Electric blankets in the winter
Pomander balls in closets and bureau drawers

Portable TV for avid watchers, with TV schedule
An air-conditioning unit for the summer months
Humidifier, nice for those with allergies
Small writing desk, pens and pencils, stationery and note pads, stamps
Note in the mirror giving the week or weekend schedule
Service bell in the guest room

Padded hanger for fur pieces

Plenty of soaps—big for bath, small fruits or flowers for hands
Sterilized glasses
Hand mirror, magnified on one side
New toothbrush and new tube of toothpaste
Supply of aspirin, Alka-Seltzer.
Check the light bulbs here, too
Check the water spigots and the drains—it's a bore if they drip or stick

Not Necessary But Nice

Bath sheets instead of towels
Air freshener
Paper-cup dispenser for guest children
Hair spray, cologne, body lotion, deodorant, mouthwash
Nail scissors and file
After-shave lotion for men

CHILDREN'S PARTIES THAT MAKE MEMORIES

Try to award a prize for everything; children adore prizes. A little biased judging is in order to see that everybody "wins." Have more events scheduled than could ever be needed, 6-8 per hour. Don't strive for originality; children want the familiar. "Let's pretend"—dressing up in "ladies" clothes or daddy's hat—is childhood's favorite game, reaching its absolute zenith with ten-year-old girls. If one child hangs back from Farmer in the Dell, don't coax: Let him watch from the sidelines if that is what he wants to do. Remember, the party is for the children's pleasure. Schedule a quiet game before you serve refreshments.

Luncheon parties for six- to eleven-year-olds should last about three hours. Refreshments should, of course, be served right away. Afternoon parties, where ice cream and cake are served rather than a full meal, should be planned for about 2 to 2½ hours. Serve the food as soon as all the guests have arrived so you won't interfere with supper appetites. Supper parties should last about 2 to 2½ hours, say from 4-6:30 P.M. with the supper served during the last half-hour. If the children come directly from school, stave off starvation by offering them a piece of fruit or a small sandwich with milk when they arrive.

The guest list

The older a child is, the longer the guest list can be. A rule of thumb is to invite as many as there are candles on the cake—up to ten, perhaps. If you invite too many, there will be so much noise and confusion it will be difficult to play games successfully. If you invite just a few and there are last minute cancellations, it won't seem like a celebration.

At five and six years old, boys and girls are friendly and play happily together. By the time they are seven, they may enjoy playing the same games, but they play them differently. So stick to either boys or girls for a better party. If possible, guests should be within a few months or a year of the party child's age. Older brothers or sisters should be there, if at all, just to help. And Lord knows, the child doesn't want the baby around stealing all his thunder.

Decorations

Nothing says "There's going to be a party!" quicker than the sight of decorations. Bunches of balloons, crepe paper streamers, and the gaily set table are more than enough to enchant younger children. From five to ten, they like the idea of a theme and the more the party room looks like a space ship, flower garden, circus, or pirate ship, the better they like it. However, having to dress up as an astronaut or an amaryllis can make a party a little top-heavy with theme. Girls will be happy with a theme party to an older age than boys.

Some form of Pin the Tail on the Donkey is almost as essential to a birthday as the ice cream. Vary it to accord with your theme: the rocketship to land on a big round pockety moon, a bug to land on a plant's leaf, or, as in the party pictured on pages 284-287, a bright fluffy yarn tail to be stuck on the well-loved Eeyore.

The biggest part of your decorating job will be wrapping all the prizes—and again, the more of these the better. Everyone must get at least one, even if you find you have to give a prize for the fastest cake eater, or to girls in pink dresses. The children will like them better if each one is wrapped differently. And though they can rip open in three seconds a package that took you five minutes to wrap, they do care that it was pretty. Have cartons handy for discarded wrappings, although many children consider them part of the toy and will want to take them home. "Toting privileges" have become as much a part of birthdays as "trick or treat" has of Halloween. So provide each child with an easily identifiable "take-home" bag. The new, small, decorated shopping bags work well. Give it to them early in the party so they can keep all their prizes together and later add favors, extra candies, hats, etc. Decorating their own bag might be an early game—with a prize given, of course.

Refreshments

In a child's straightforward mind, the party starts when he eats. Keep all the food simple and familiar, for younger children do not eat well when they are away from home or faced with all the excitement of a party. Older children may wish to experiment. One 11-year-old birthday boy we know requested

Frog's Legs Provençal for his party. His startled but pleased mother talked him into having it for the family "birthday" dinner and substituting chopped steak because she felt his young friends might not share his gourmet tastes. Buffet style appeals to the seven-to-eleven group. One sure success is a soda-fountain setup where guests can concoct their own ice-cream fantasies. Just set out the ingredients and watch the fun begin.

From the sixth birthday on, the gooier the cake, the more spectacular. Often each child in the family has his own particular cake served only on his birthday. But many children like a different cake each year. The most important thing is that it have his own name spelled out in icing on the top.

The more there is for everyone to unwrap at a party, the more fun it will be, and an attractively packed lunch in a box, sand pail, or basket will be, for most, a new and different way to eat, particularly if a surprise is tucked in and all the pieces are individually wrapped.

Games

Now that you have planned the food and made the decorations, what are the children going to do at the party? Children can be counted on to initiate some games of their own, but a whole afternoon of "free play" can result in chaos and cacophony.

As soon as the guests have arrived and presents have been inspected or put aside, it is time to do something. It is at this point in the planning that many parents just throw up their hands and decide against a party, because they feel incapable of coping with a group of other people's children.

If you don't feel up to putting your house and game-leader abilities on the line, you may wish to arrange a trip to a puppet show, a ball game, a young people's movie, a zoo, an amusement park, or a skating rink—or the circus, if it is in town. Just be sure each parent knows your plans, particularly if it entails some special clothing. Be sure to have another adult along, even for a small group, to help with transportation and supervision. Make all arrangements in advance so that everything goes smoothly and there are no disappointments.

For at-home parties, it is the games that ensure enjoyment and active participation. They require a little advance planning, true, but they encourage children to use their imaginations and skills instead of just being spectators.

Little ones are likely to be excitable and impatient at a party, so keep their games short and familiar. Nursery games like Round the Mulberry Bush and activities like blowing bubbles work beautifully. Or they will listen enraptured to almost any story read or told. A little older, and they respond to hunts and mazes like the Spider Web game we pictured, tricky games like Simon Says. About seven to eleven, the general procedure is to pick up the loot and go. So have activity planned for guests on their arrival and schedule every minute. These children, both boys and girls, tend to knock themselves out, so after a wild and wiggley game such as Under the Broomstick, plan one that requires mental activity and physical quiet. This age likes counting out to form teams and competing against each other.

The success of games depends on you. Know the rules thoroughly, so you can explain them clearly. Don't ask the children if they want to play such and such a game, just invite them to join you on the floor for the game.

Children are fun to play with. Sure, the din may be horrendous, and it may take you a week to get the house back in order, but parties are the stuff memories are made of for you, too. There will be moments as marvelous for you as for your child.

Perhaps it will be when your five-year-old suddenly shows his first sign of generosity, or as at our party (page 286) when the seven-year-old birthday girl stood up on her chair and spontaneously raised a toast: "To Mrs. Wallace (her mother), who is a good cook and has a sense of humor." ■

Correction

In the October issue, the price of the Leviton dimmer on page 190 should have been given as "under $8," not "under $3."

Christmas on Nantucket: A Feast of Holiday Re

Sophistication city-style: Henredon is at the heart of it.

It's an urban look that spells Paris, London, Rome, New York and everywhere in between. It's de Ville. A collection of upholstered, occasional and dining pieces. Small and choice. Like fine gems. Designed for use in ensemble or singly. With muted finishes of walnut and rosewood. Styled with Parisian touches of antiqued brass in galleries, drawer pulls, beadings and decorative mounts. It's a cool, dark kind of chic. With just a touch of gilding. The look of two continents.

And the function of two lives. (In city spaces, you've got to be practical, too.) Oval and round shapes make small spaces look larger. (They avoid snags, too.) Tables open and close to make room for extra guests. (We even have one that rises and lowers for multiple uses.) Small chests conceal more than appearance would suggest. And cabinets stand as storage closets, room dividers, or just beautiful things to look at.

Take a look at these pieces from Henredon's de Ville Collection. You could do a lot with them. Wherever you live. After all, nobody ever said that country living couldn't be just as sophisticated and convenient as city life.

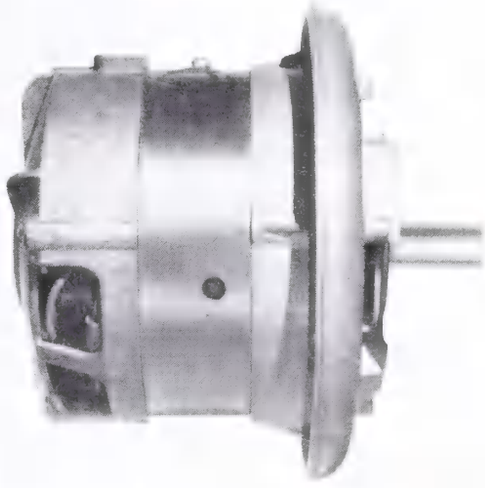
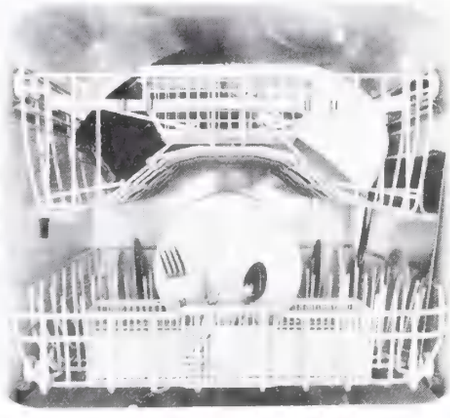
How to buy a good dishwasher.

Here are some things to look for if you're looking for a good dishwasher.

First of all, peek inside and see what washes the dishes. Some dishwashers use several spray gimmicks. But spraying isn't washing. Water has to have just the right velocity, volume and motion to get dishes really clean. (A KitchenAid dishwasher uses a sturdy wash arm, with water action so effective dishes come out completely clean, without any hand-rinsing.)



Then check how it dries. Most dishwashers have a simple heating coil that dries dishes the same as if you stuck them in a hot oven. All this concentrated heat could harm fine china and plasticware. (A KitchenAid dishwasher has a separate heater and fan located outside the wash chamber that circulates hot air over, under and around each dish. It's very thorough and safe.)



Be sure to consider how long the dishwasher will last, too. This is hard to tell, but here are a few points to consider. Is the dishwasher made of durable materials? (For example, KitchenAid dishwashers have porcelain enamel on the inside and outside of the wash chamber.) Is the motor dependable? (Few manufacturers bother to design their own motors. KitchenAid does. And tests them electronically before assembly.) Is the dishwasher inspected after it's assembled? (Every part is thoroughly checked and every single KitchenAid dishwasher is hooked up for a test run before it leaves the factory.) Is the dishwasher made by specialists? (At KitchenAid it is. KitchenAid is built by the people who have made commercial dishwashers for restaurants, hotels, hospitals, etc., for over 80 years; home dishwashers for nearly 20 years. And many of these original home dishwashers are still going strong.)

Another point. Find out how much the dishwasher holds. You'll probably get an answer in place settings. But look for yourself, too. If you see empty corners or notches cut out of racks, the dishwasher has a lot of wasted space.

But capacity isn't everything. A good dishwasher should be convenient to use, too. See if you can adjust the racks to hold big things like roasters and deep bowls. And you should be able to pull the racks all the way out so you can reach in the back easily. On a portable dishwasher, can you reach the lower rack without unloading or removing the top rack? And watch out if you have to load dishes in a certain way. This gets to be a pain in the neck.

One more thing. You shouldn't have to fuss with dials or knobs with a good dishwasher. So make sure the dishwasher works completely automatically, at the touch of a button.

And if you want your dishes and glasses to dry without any spots get a dishwasher with an Automatic Rinse Agent Dispenser. You'll find this is very important if you live in a hard water area.

Now, if you want to save some time before you start looking, here are two more things you can do. (1) Ask some KitchenAid dishwasher owners how they like their dishwashers. (2) Send this coupon to KitchenAid Dishwashers, Dept. 6DB-12, The Hobart Manufacturing Co., Troy, Ohio 45373. You'll get full details on portables, built-ins, convertible-portables and dishwasher-sink combinations.

We give our stainless muscles.

If you pick up a piece of our stainless, it'll just feel heavy. And nicely balanced.

But wait till you dig into frozen ice cream. That's when you'll feel our muscles.

What we do is roll the metal so it's thicker at the parts of a spoon or fork that take stress. We call it grade rolling.

It takes more time to make stainless this way. And more money.

But it works.

We stake our reputation on it. That's what our "IS" maker's mark stands for. It tells you you're getting stainless that can take just about anything you can dish out.

The pattern you see here is brand new. It even has a strong name: Norse.

You pay only $79.95 for a 50 piece service for 8. At your jewelers or wherever fine silverware is sold.

We'd be happy to show you all our other patterns too. For a free color brochure write The International Silver Company, Meriden, Connecticut.

How to give delightfully individual gifts without a duplication

What if you do have a friend in Connecticut, a cousin in California, and a niece in New York who are all mad for madras? No problem. Crane's natty new "Madras" design (shown below) comes in three distinctive color harmonies.

It's just one of our merry stationery creations for Christmas. There are both classic and unexpected designs—sparkling stripes, fantasies in florals, charming Early Americanisms and artful old-world frilleries. There are smart weaves, striking colors and color combinations—and our delightful hand-brushed borders.

Our idea is to make it easy for you to choose personally pleasing, and eminently appropriate, gifts for a long list of people—both important gifts and tokens of appreciation. A Crane dealer will be happy to help.

In Crane gifts, luxury is obvious—in the rich look and feel of the papers (all 100% rag and bearing our watermark) and in their specially designed gift boxes.

Cost? You'll find a wide selection of generous assortments (letters, notes, envelopes) for under $5. But you can spend as little as $1.25 or as much as you like. Crane & Co., Inc., Dalton, Mass.

There's status in starting at the bottom. Once you decide your home deserves a fine piano, it's worth digging deep to see exactly what makes one piano better than others. ■ Take any one of our grands. ■ Look underneath. The first thing you see is a set of six inflexible steel spokes bolted to the inner rim. It's our exclusive Tension Resonator which maintains the crown of our sounding board year after year, no matter how punishing the climate or humidity. No other piano has anything like it. ■ Next, run your hand along the wooden underplanes. They're as smoothly finished as fine furniture . . . a pretty good clue to the workmanship in every single inch of a Mason & Hamlin. ■ Once you're back on your feet, see what all this quality sounds like. Play it. The tone is warm and rich . . . characteristically Mason & Hamlin. DECORATOR'S DIARY

"His Mother is coming!" cried Mrs. Britten over the telephone, in what sounded like pure hysteria, "and she collects hooked rugs and Early American pressed glass, and my sofa is shot, shot—and I don't think I should have married him!"

I could just see her at the other end of the wire, little Bix Britten, née Brady, about 19 years ago, her straight brick-red hair half-curtaining her pale, smudgy-eyed and pretty face, and wearing, I'd bet anything, a mini-mini-skirt and Brobdingnagian bracelets. It's the kind of way-out fashion she can get away with, just as she got away with what seemed a ridiculous child marriage, elopement, family feud and reconciliation included.

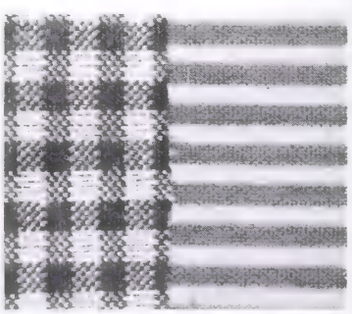
As a semi-official godmother, I've lived through lots of such crises with her. In fact, it was I who encouraged her to accept that foam-rubber sofa when her mother offered it, beat up or not, because it was far superior in design and construction to anything the young Britten budget could afford. Their preferences, sad to say, soar uncomfortably to furnishings like Eero Aarnio's globular chairs, at a thousand dollars a globule—avant-garde elegance I'm afraid will have long since ceased being avant-garde by the time the Brittens can buy it.

However, the mere fact that Bix had snatched up that sofa when she did proved to me that her esthetic antennae are well attuned to quality, and in my book quality-consciousness is a gift more to be treasured than a vicuna rug or a solid-gold crewel needle. Two current items of status that also turn Bix on. But underneath that mop of hair is a basically level head.

"Cool it," I cooed, stepping somewhat out of character. "Slip into something slick and meet me at the Sign of the Dove, where your squared-off old auntie will buy you a lunch and listen."

"What I'm really afraid of," she confessed, between occasional pecks at a Salade Niçoise, "is that Mrs. Britten will offer to redo the sofa and sort of take me over as another Early American project. I don't think she understands that I'm not the antimacassar-and-moss-rose type. The sofa is so noncommittal in shape that it might just as well be covered in flowered chintz as in something—well, something bitingly modern, something cool and sharp and different."

"You can thank your long-headed mother for that, my girl. She recognized a sofa that could jump two or three different ways, biting or unbiting, depending on her humor and a change in its slipcover."



"But when Mrs. Britten ever sees that gooseneck rocker we found at the Good Will, I'm afraid she'll think I really go ape for the antique. . . ."

"Oh, I wouldn't say that," I murmured, musing on the giant crochet pattern of Bix's "nothing" of a shell. "Don't you think she'll get the message when she sees the trompe l'oeil needlepoint you've covered the rocker with? And, by the way, why a pattern of mushrooms—or is that something only you and your psychiatrist can say?"

"Mushrooms come naturally," she answered calmly, "because I had so much leftover gray-and-white wool to work with after I gave up knitting Argyle socks, and then, of course, those Danish fairy-tale mushrooms in red dotted with white made perfect loves of accents, specially in the same room with the red-and-white hardline we rent from the museum. Actually, I adore to make things by myself! I bet with enough time and money and an attic to work in, I could knit enough yardage to slipcover the sofa in something spectacular, like a hound's-tooth check or a way-out stripe!" She giggled.

"A dream, but not so idle a one," said I, "because a knitted fabric would be the perfect re-

how long does the average Christmas gift keep your son happy?

It's no secret that young men become disenchanted with most gifts very quickly. But not when the gift is a versatile Williams' "bed within a bed." Your young man is assured his best buddy can be his bunkmate any night of the year.

In the durable Williams' collections, designed by famous furniture designer Charles Horton, you'll find sturdily built dressers, chests and desks, to match. One or all, a great gift for man, boy or home! Each Williams' piece carries the official certification of the Fine Hardwoods Association.

Take a good look at the Williams' display when you go Christmas shopping. If you can find more gift for your money anywhere else in the store, buy it!

furbishment for your foam-rubber sofa. The elastic stretchiness of a knit will cling to the cushions' roundness where flat-woven goods might wrinkle. A knit will cosset curves and hold them smoothly, like a favorite girdle."

"You mean it," said Bix. "I thought you were kidding."

"Au contraire, I'm dead serious, and what's more, if you will step with me across the teeming avenue, you will see for yourself that the fashion for knits doesn't stop at the nearest boutique. We are now en route to the showroom of Unika Vaev, a fabric firm as Danish as your favorite mushrooms, with a headman-designer called Verner Panton, whose skillful way with pattern is exceeded only by his daring sense of color. And it's all destined to be used on furniture like yours."

It is not enough to say that the Britten problem was solved. On the heels of a morning of hysteria came an afternoon of sheer joy, during which the young matron found herself trapped deliriously among bolts of knitted stripes and checks, facing such possibilities as orange-and-turquoise stripes as opposed to black-and-white checks from the seven color combinations and ten solid colors of a lightweight 63-inch-wide upholstery knit called "Brynje," and the eleven solid colors of a heavier knit, 59" wide, called "Kyrads." Appropriately enough for such toughly serviceable goods, "Brynje" means a coat of mail armour, and "Kyrads" means a breastplate, although the fiber content of this elastic stretch fabric is 55 percent wool, 30 percent rayon, and 15 percent nylon, and they're all engineered to cover without slip-up such unmedieval upholstering materials as foam rubber, foam nylon, and polyurethane.

Final choice for fending off the rosebuds and antimacassars, a black-and-white striped knit for the sofa, some black-and-white checked knit for cushions, and, lest mother-in-law miss the point that her son has married a Mod, just enough of that turquoise-and-orange stripe to make an at-home skimmer for Bix.

ADDRESS BOOK

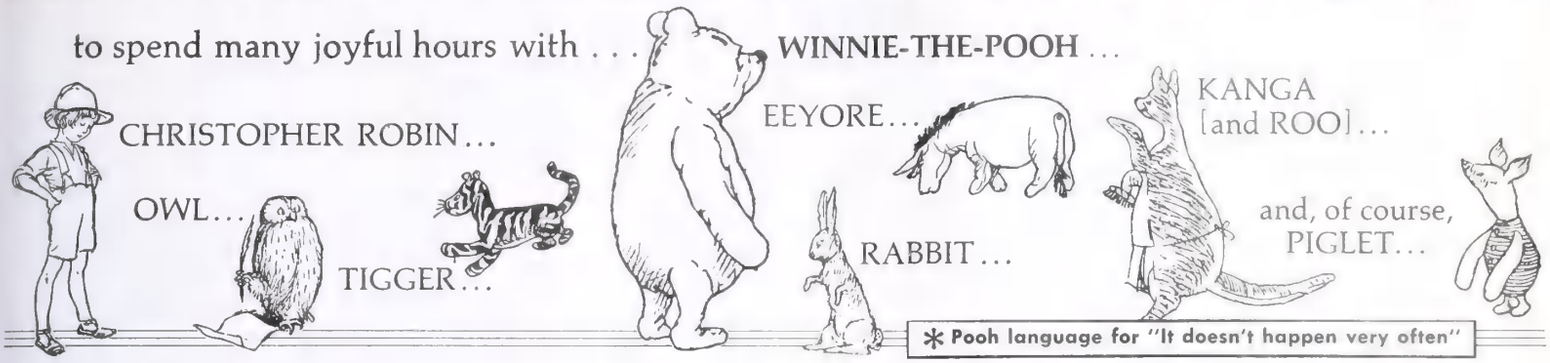
By EPSIE KINARD

Foods that unlock taste memories of places friends have loved make exciting gifts. Take that friend, for example, who has had an unforgettable hot, crusty raclette in some lusty café of an old Swiss guild hall. The melting surface of a wheel of fromage au Bagnes, toasted against fierce flames and scraped off on a plate of boiled potatoes, green onions, pickles, and moist brown bread, was washed down with wine from an earthenware jug. A gift to unlock those memories: a Swiss raclette machine of stainless steel with ultraviolet-ray bulbs, drip pan, cheese receiver (price $37.75, plus postage) and fromage au Bagnes, $1.89 a pound from Cheese Unlimited, 1263 Lexington Ave., New York City.

For centuries a toothsome treat a whole family loves to munch, tirggel is another Swiss spécialité du pays. A honey cake, flat, thin, and gingerbread-brown is handsome and sizable enough (12″ by 11½″) to mount and hang. Baked in ancient wooden molds as sculptured as a Greek frieze, designs reproduce arms or folk characters of the Swiss cantons. From Bloomingdale's, 59th Street and Lexington Ave., New York City, $2 each, postage 50 cents.

You can give a homesick New Englander a gift of fiddleheads, the greens that look like tiny green fiddles but are actually ferns and taste like a happy marriage of asparagus and mushrooms. Frozen fiddleheads, 10-ounce package, 79 cents, are harvested and packed after spring freshets swell streams and brooks of New Brunswick, Canada, and Aristook County, Maine. Available through S. S. Pierce, Boston.

Frozen quiches, as soufflé-light as those eaten in Alsatian taverns and downed with pale green Sylvaner wine, are shipped by air, packed in ice. Gala Delicacies, 625 Brook Avenue, Bronx, New York 10455, ships nine-inch tarts (two-pound package) for $4 each; 1½″ individual cocktail tarts in aluminum cups, packed twelve to a tray, $1.75, postpaid. Minimum order $9.75. If telephone number is included with order, airline will notify arrival of shipment by phone.



To Southern expatriates who sigh at the mention of beaten biscuits, Berea College, Berea, Kentucky, will ship orders. Bent on keeping this pioneer art and folk craft of the Old South alive, student industries make regular dinner, tea (round and long), and cocktail-size biscuits. Each, 35 cents for box of twelve, plus postage. Berea also adds the crowning touch to the tea table: sugar cubes, hand-decorated with tinted icing, pastry tube, and skilled students' sleight of hand. Sixteen cubes, with tiny flowers, holly, mistletoe: 85 cents; 32, $1.65. For properly mounting these works of art, a lacy sterling-silver trough is $6.60; tongs, $2.55. All postpaid.

Friends who remember a moonlit Parthenon or Epidaurus as one of life's exalted moments know that in Greece, the ancient home of the olive, the Calamata is king. Lush red-brown olives, slit to release acid and packed in vinegar and olive oil, cost $1.30 for each 11-ounce jar, postage extra, from Hammacher Schlemmer, 145 E. 57th Street, New York City. ■

MEMBERSHIP in the Book-of-the-Month Club is a certain way to keep from missing, through oversight or overbusyness, the new books you fully intend to read. You will pay on the average 20% less for those books you want than you otherwise would. You will have a wide choice—more than 200 books a year; and under the Club's new Book-Dividend system you will be acquiring useful and beautiful volumes—as well as fine library sets—for trifling sums.

✶ HOW CAN IT BE DONE? The Club's Book-Dividend system is comparable to the traditional profit-sharing systems of consumer cooperatives. A portion of the amount members pay for the books they buy is accumulated and invested in entire editions of valuable books and sets through special contractual arrangements with the publishers. These are the Club's Book-Dividends.

✶ YOU HAVE A WIDE CHOICE OF BOOK-DIVIDENDS • The system is simple. If you continue after the trial, for every Club Selection or Alternate you buy you will earn one Book-Dividend Credit. Each Credit, upon payment of a nominal sum—often only $1.00 or $1.50—somewhat more for an unusually expensive volume, will entitle you to a Book-Dividend. More than a hundred different volumes are at present available, and others are constantly being added.

An old-fashioned Swedish Christmas party

In New York during the holidays, Consul General and Mrs. Tore Tallroth invite a few fellow Swedish families away-from-home to a traditional Christmas celebration. The handsome consulate is provincial for the night, sweet with fresh pine and spruce and rustic trinkets of straw and wood, glowing top to bottom with candle and hearth light. Young and old join together in games and song, toast the season with glögg, link arms in a chain to run through the house in the breathless "Long Dance." Then, to the music of fiddle and accordion, they march to the kitchen for an elaborate smorgasbord of old-fashioned favorites, Swedish sweet breads and holiday cookies. (Continued on page 22)

NOBODY EVER TELLS YOU THESE THINGS

From the kitchen of our food editor come helpful answers to some of the common but often puzzling questions in cookery

By HELEN McCULLY

At what temperature should cheeses be served? At room temperature, if you would savor them at their best. Room temperature can, of course, be anything—a hot kitchen or a cool pantry. For best flavor, we suggest the coolest room you have. In general, allow a couple of hours before serving for cheeses on the firm side and somewhat less for soft cheeses.

How do you chop raisins? If you have an electric blender, the California Raisin Advisory Board recommends this method: Freeze the quantity of raisins called for in the recipe, drop the frozen raisins into the blender, turn the motor on and off three times for coarsely chopped raisins; for fine, turn motor to high speed for a couple of seconds. This works for both seedless and the seeded muscat raisins, but it does not work for other dried fruits. Lacking a blender, toss the raisins lightly in salad oil, then chop with a French knife. The oil helps to keep them from sticking to the knife.

Can I make my own garlic olives? Sure. Drain the liquid off the olives, add a clove or two of garlic, peeled and split, to the jar and cover with olive or salad oil. And, if you like and have some on hand, a bit of dried red pepper. Refrigerate for several days. By trial and error, you can decide how much garlic to use. Use the oil to make salad dressings.

Why does my peppermill stick so hard I can't turn it? The oil from the peppercorns rusts the thread on the screw. Unscrew the mill with a pair of pliers, then clean the thread thoroughly with a piece of steel wool—not a soap pad. Rub lightly with a little vaseline. That should do the trick.

What's a good way to keep small kitchen tools right at hand? A crock with a wide open mouth and a heavy base (so it won't tip over). Stick all your wooden spoons, spatulas, whips, your baster, kitchen forks, etc. into it and you won't have to fish into drawers when you need them. If possible, put up a magnetic knife holder in the same area and use it for your small knives, vegetable peeler, screwdriver, etc.

What is caviar? The roe (or eggs) of sturgeon. Black caviar, imported from Russia and Iran, is the most famous and the finest. The Beluga is the largest grain; the next size, not as large, is known simply as sturgeon caviar; and the smallest is the Sevruga. In addition, from Siberia there is a caviar called amour, also sturgeon roe, that is of a much lesser quality. We have as well the Canadian caviar, also sturgeon roe, which is smaller and generally lighter. Neither of these even approaches the Russian and Iranian. And there is, of course, red caviar, the roe from salmon. Good in itself, but not in any way comparable to the fine blacks.

If you buy black caviar regardless of price, you would probably choose the Beluga (it retails for around $50 for 14 ounces); but if you buy by taste, you would choose the Sevruga which, although from the same sturgeon family, is a smaller grain of excellent quality, and much less expensive. These are both whole-grain caviars. Osetrova, which we are told has a very good taste, cannot be imported into the U.S. because it is preserved in boric acid, which is against the law of this country.

The color of whole-grain caviar varies from light to dark gray to charcoal. Some is even greenish, but color has nothing to do with the quality. Occasionally some blond caviar (a sport) that tastes exactly the same as that of the true colors turns up, but most people eschew it, undoubtedly because of lack of familiarity.

What is pressed caviar? It is roe from sturgeon, which may be too mature or not mature enough, so the grains don't separate as they do when the roe is à point. It is from the same type of fish and, except for this idiosyncrasy, the same caviar. Salt is added to it; then the caviar is pressed to get rid of any excess liquid. Dyed-in-the-wool caviar aficionados prefer the pressed to the whole grain, and Russians won't eat anything else. On a price basis, it is about one-third that of the great Beluga.

How do you eat caviar? "With a spoon," says Mr. M. N. Cherneff, importer of Continental specialties. Not only a spoon, but "a big spoon." Mr. Cherneff says, "Caviar is correctly eaten, chilled, on plain toast or even on white bread, and never desecrated by hard-cooked egg or even lemon garnishes." Egg garnishes and such are undoubtedly used to stretch this costly delicacy.

What is a Büche de Noël? The traditional French Christmas yule log, sold by all confectioners in France at Christmastime. Usually made of a genoise, rolled, filled with butter cream, decorated, and finished to look like a log. Another symbolic Christmas cake in France is shaped to look like a shoe.

Are Brazil nuts generally available? Yes. In the shell. But, as the saying goes, "It's a hard nut to crack." To facilitate cracking, freeze them, then crack them open with a hammer or mallet. For many adults, Brazil nuts are associated with Christmas because it was once the custom (perhaps it still is in some families) to put some "pigtoes," as they are often called, in the toes of Christmas stockings.

Is it necessary to refrigerate vegetable oils? No. If refrigerated, they often turn cloudy and, in some instances, solidify, which makes a problem when you want to use them, since they must be brought back to room temperature.

If an apple pie turns out dry when cooked, how can I make it juicy and edible? Cook up a little simple syrup, add a dash of rum or Cognac, and pour it through the slashes in the crust.

Are double-acting and single-acting (regular) baking powders interchangeable in baking? No. Unless a recipe specifically calls for double-acting, use the regular.

What is a vanilla bean and how is it used? The dried pod of the vanilla plant. From it we get vanilla extract, the flavoring that bestowed its name on an internationally famous dish—vanilla ice cream. Chefs, generally, prefer the pod (it should be split) to flavor the milk in sweet sauces, in rum and Cognac that is to be used in making desserts, or to sprinkle over fruits, to tuck into a jar of granulated sugar, to perfume the sugar for cooking, etc. The pod is reusable—just take it out of the liquid, rinse, dry, and put away. In buying vanilla by the bottle, don't be beguiled into buying imitation products. ■

People, Places, Pleasures

By DUNCAN MacDONALD

Widely known for her daily interview program on New York's WQXR, Miss MacDonald is an acute observer of the many worlds of esthetics, entertainment, travel, and the home

VOICING: Holidays are full of the sounds of rejoicing and of revelry, those at Christmastime encompassing a tonal scale all the way from church bells ringing out beautiful carols to the midnight voices and horns bringing in the New Year.

One Christmas carol without which the season would not seem the same is "O Little Town of Bethlehem," written in 1865 by Phillips Brooks when he was rector of Holy Trinity Church in Philadelphia. Traveling in the Holy Land, he climbed one morning to a hilltop that gave him a view of the sacred city just as the sun appeared. The sight inspired the words that were later set to music by Trinity's organist, Louis H. Redner.

REJOICING: Many and pleasing are the sounds and memories of our Christmas celebrations: the famed bell ringers on Beacon Hill in Boston . . . the choral concerts at Williamsburg, Virginia . . . the candlelight procession down the mountainside at Hot Springs, Arkansas . . . the varied cadences of familiar words, the simple greeting, Merry Christmas!

NOT EVEN A MOUSE: A Rhode Island tradition is the reading of the poem "A Visit From St. Nicholas" ("'Twas the Night Before Christmas"), at the one-time Newport home of Dr. Clement C. Moore, who wrote these famous verses in 1822.

The reading is performed by one of Rhode Island's distinguished citizens; last year it was Senator Pell. The house, situated on Catherine Street at Greenough Place, the highest point in Newport, offers many advantages for the occasion: 35 rooms, with five fireplaces on the first floor, others elsewhere. On the fourth floor there is a "widow's walk," a large glassed enclosure with a porch opening on Catherine Street, designed to look out at Narragansett Bay and the Atlantic Ocean. It is here that the reading takes place at dusk on Christmas Eve. Children come from miles away to hear the magical words, partake of hot chocolate and doughnuts, and participate with the townspeople in the singing of Christmas carols. There are many visitors to the small museum within the house, now owned by Eugene and Elise LaParle. First editions of the poem are exhibited together with toys of the period and reprints of the famous drawings by Thomas Nast.

NOT IN THIS HOUSE: What more definitive yuletide sounds than those of A Christmas Carol, written by Charles Dickens in 1843 and recited so many millions of times since then? No one, perhaps, has heard it more frequently than Monica Dickens, great-granddaughter of the celebrated author. She, too, is celebrated, and for talented and skillful harvesting of the same field: She was one of England's best-selling women novelists before she moved to this country and became one of ours.

She and her husband, Commander Roy Stratton, U.S. Navy, Retired, live in an old sea captain's house at North Falmouth, Massachusetts, with two teen-age daughters, Pamela and Prudence, and an agreeable assortment of animals: horses, ponies, dog, and cat. Monica says of her garden, "I planted a typical English garden, lots of borders, perennials, lots of lilies, two big rose gardens. I didn't realize when I made it that I wouldn't be able to get help, or I wouldn't have made it so large." And she says their holiday will be a quiet one this year. The Strattons feel it is no fun for the young people when the grownups have parties. As to whether A Christmas Carol is read on Christmas Day. Monica Dickens said no.

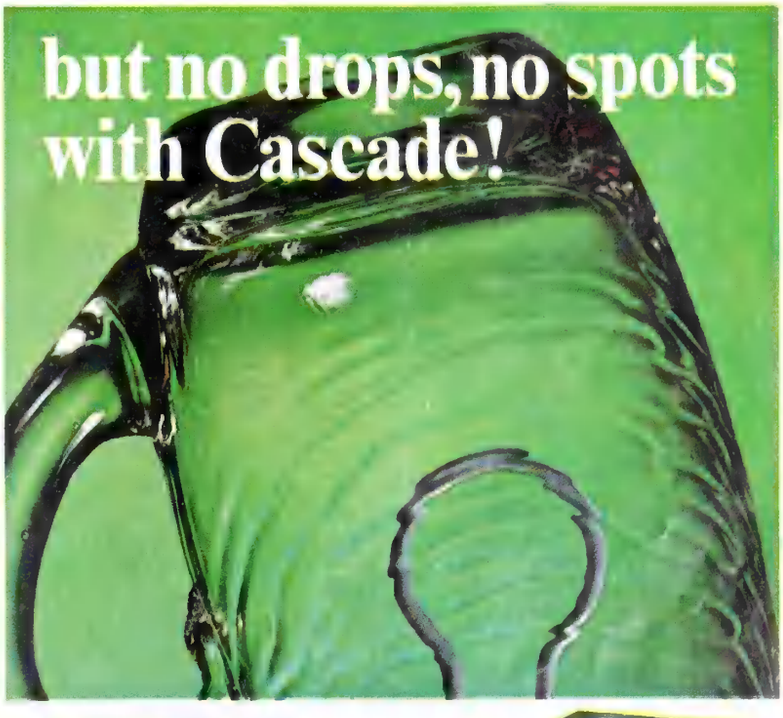
SEEING TO SKIING: Another Commander, the bearded Englishman Edward Whitehead, and his Welsh wife Tommy found themselves with a wholly different problem for the holidays: children and friends scattering to the far winds in search of skiing. So they built a ski lodge at Bromley, Vermont, and will spend this Christmas there, as they did last year. Although Tommy describes it as a very simple prefabricated house that was put up in two days, the fact is that it has black paneling and is completely covered in red carpeting. There are three bedrooms, a large fireplace, and an L-shape living room that has at one end a huge mattress ("the pad") on which about ten people can recline after skiing.

Did Schweppes take a place on the menu? "No," says Tommy, "for Christmas it's Champagne. But we don't forget England. We cook our pudding with sixpence, real English sixpence, and we actually cook them in the pudding."

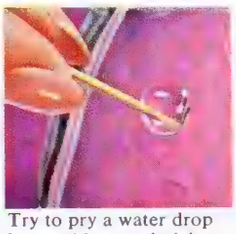
"WE NEED A LITTLE CHRISTMAS": Holidays are not always a time for families to be together, as those in the theatre know so well. They must be on their stage, whether it be London, New York, or a Hollywood sound stage. At any time of year the Lansburys flit across the land like very glamorous swallowtail butterflies. Edgar Lansbury, producer of the Frank Gilroy play, The Subject Was Roses, (Pulitzer and Tony awards) spends the holidays with his wife's family in Livingston, New Jersey, where as many as 40 often gather. Twin brother Bruce Lansbury divides his time between the West Coast and the East producing the CBS-TV series, "The Wild Wild West."

Angela Lansbury, who received the Tony award for her starring role in Mame, based on the Patrick Dennis novel, Auntie Mame, will be right here in New York, playing holiday performances for those who have come to New York for a gala weekend. And giving her own special kind of warmth to one of the show's hit songs, "We Need A Little Christmas." Actress Moyna McGill, mother of the three talented Lansburys, will spend her time, like many others, on the long-distance wire.



MUSIC FOR WAITING: When you telephone the James Micheners in Pipersville, Pennsylvania, you hear lovely sounds every day of the year. From their days in Japan, the Micheners have brought home a device called "Du Origel," a music box that plays whenever the telephone receiver is placed on its specially designed cradle. If you have to wait for one or another of the Micheners to come to the phone, you'll hear a delightful tinkling sound. The idea came from those areas in Japan where the telephone operator will cut the connection if there is no sound on the line. The courteous Japanese feel music is better than a continuous mumble of inanities.

In addition to his writing (Tales of the South Pacific received the Pulitzer prize and the stories were adapted for the musical South Pacific. The new motion picture starring Julie Andrews was based on his work Hawaii). James Michener and his wife are interested in contemporary American art.



A typical evening in Bucks County? Michener described it to me this way: "My wife and I have for some years been putting together a collection of American paintings. We have paintings by most of the great names in American art, but on one occasion when we were away, we felt homesick for Bucks County and the beauty that we knew there, and we decided that we would commission works by the best artists who work in our district. So we have been having some very exciting evenings at home. The artists bring their work, and we call in the neighbors and we have cider and gingerbread. We have had some fascinating times, and it's one of the best things we've ever done."

(House Beautiful will be glad to supply further details on all items mentioned in the column.)

Try Cascade's amazing toothpick test!

Try to pry a water drop loose with a toothpick. You can't! The drop clings tightly to glass and will dry into an ugly spot.

Touch the drop now—poof! The drop loses its grip! That's how Cascade with Chlorosheen works in your dishwasher.

No more towel touch-ups. Just sparkling, amazingly spotfree dishes when you use Cascade in your dishwasher. Only Cascade has Chlorosheen to make drops lose their grip. Drops don't cling, so spots can't form. Dishes dry spotless, because Cascade makes water rinse off in clear sheets.

"MESSIAH"

Two new recordings go a long way to reaching the ideal originally conceived by Handel

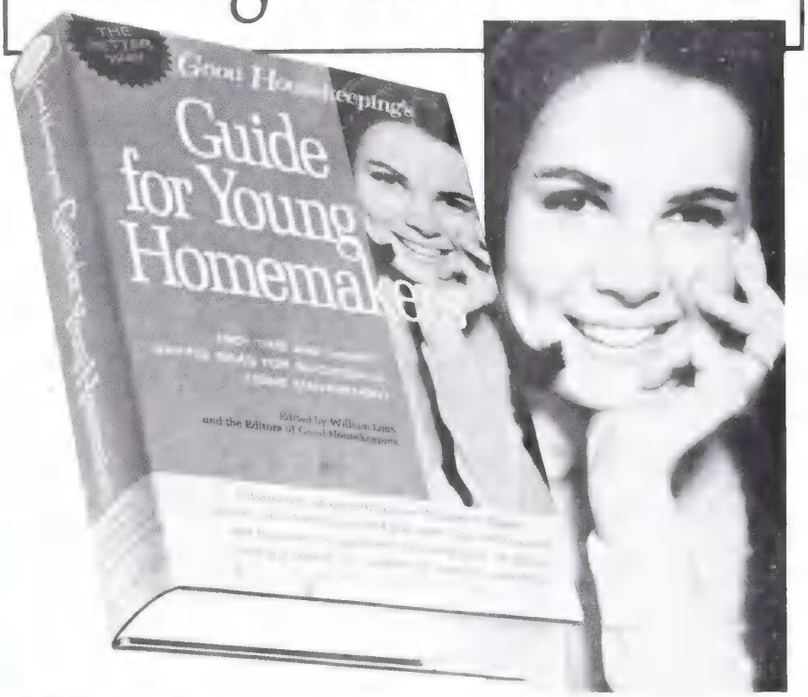
By RICHARD FREED

Outside the unique category of carols, with their folklike radiance, no music associated with Christmas is more universally revered than Handel's Messiah. So revered has this oratorio been, in fact, that it has accumulated layers of tribute in the form of inflated, ponderous performances which have done two centuries of disservice to the vital spirit that illuminated Handel's work, and to the generations of listeners subjected to the distortions of an all-too-hallowed and thoroughly lamentable tradition.

A vast orchestra of a hundred players (or even hundreds), a thundering organ, a massive chorus of a thousand voices (or even thousands)—this is the traditional "glorification" of a work Handel composed for an orchestra of about three dozen, including the harpsichord and organ (a small portable organ, by the way), and a chorus numbering about the same. Moreover, the "amplifications" and "modernizations" of well-meaning musicians—from Mozart to Ebenezer Prout to the late Sir Eugene Goossens—have created the impression that this was a hugely imperfect work, sorely in need of a crutch.

It was only fairly recently, along with the general restudying of baroque music and its performance, that musicians have come around to the startling discovery that Messiah, just as Handel wrote it, is a sublime, exciting, incredibly moving musical experience, a work that needs no apologies but, on the contrary, is immeasurably superior to any and all of the various "improvements" in every respect.

It was less than fifty years after Messiah's Dublin première of 1742 that the "tradition" began—a tradition laden with distortions that have made a heavy-footed, earthbound, solemn ritual out of a soaring, transcendent hymn of joy, thanks and praise that moved Handel himself to remark, on completing the composition of the "Hallelujah" chorus, "I did think I did see all Heaven before me, and the great God Himself." How this happened is set forth absorbingly in the annotation accompanying two brand-new recordings of Messiah, which attempt to set matters right by going back to the authentic style of the original—and which succeed grandly.



One of the first attempts at this "authentic" approach was the recording made by the late Herman Scherchen in 1953 and still available on the Bach Guild label. Scherchen's dramatic underscoring of such arias as "Why do the nations" and, more strikingly still, his light, dancing way with such choruses as "For unto us a child is born" showed, more effectively than a hundred musicological essays, the fallacy of the stodgy old "Crystal Palace" approach. Both of the 1966 recordings go still farther toward realizing the Handelian ideal. One is a Philips album (Stereo PHS 3-992, Monaural PHM 3-592) recorded in London, with the young English maestro Colin Davis conducting; the other is on RCA Victor (LM LSC 6175) with the famous Robert Shaw Chorale.

As he began his recording, Colin Davis said to his producer, Harold Lawrence, "We'll put our vital, superb, red-blooded Jehovah God back where He belongs and see what happens." From the sound of things, Robert Shaw might have expressed himself in the same language, for "what happens" in both sets is something quite wonderful, revelatory in the best sense. My personal preference is for the warmer, more majestic flow of the Davis version, but many may prefer the heightened excitement of Shaw's generally faster tempi and somewhat irregular rhythms. Both three-disc sets boast fine soloists and are handsomely recorded, with an illuminating booklet by Igor Kipnis in the Philips and a communicative essay by Klaus George Roy reflecting Handel's broad humanity in the Victor. ■

If you have the determination to follow this world-famous physician's Final Diet, then

YOU WILL LOSE UP TO 100 POUNDS PER YEAR

-and Never Gain an Ounce of it Back!

This is an entirely different kind of reducing ad--for an entirely different kind of reducing book. It is the LAST reducing book... the LAST reducing product... the LAST reducing aid you will ever have to buy in your entire lifetime—IF you have the determination to learn the TRUTH about permanent reducing, and stick to it!

This advertisement pulls no punches. It offers you no impossible dreams. It simply gives you a set of facts about permanent reducing—about taking off weight and NEVER putting it on again—that, though they are demanding, are also so thrilling that they may be hard to believe at first.

Let us state the most vital fact over again—right here:

If you follow this Final Diet, you will lose up to 100 pounds per year, and never gain an ounce of it back.

We are going to repeat this statement of fact, over and over again throughout this advertisement, so you can never lose sight of it.

If you follow this Final Diet, you will lose up to 100 pounds per year, and never gain an ounce of it back.

This is the essential fact. Now let us go on with the details—

Let us introduce this puzzling fact right at the beginning.

What you are about to be given in this book is a strict and precise diet—which carefully and scientifically controls your every eating moment—but which has the surprising result of making many of your weight-loss problems far simpler than you ever dreamed they could be!

SOME OF THE STARTLING MEDICAL FACTS YOU WILL DISCOVER IN THIS BOOK:

- The one fatal TIMING mistake that makes most people fat (90% of all overweight people do it). Not in this case, what you eat, but how you eat it. See page 19.
- The incredibly simple secret of making the same amount of food seem TWICE as much. See page 20.
- The only effective way to handle tension-eating. See page 22.
- How to deal with the extra, after-meal stimulation you need if you've just stopped smoking. In other words, how to stop smoking without gaining weight. See page 25.
- How to make artificial sweetners go twice as far. See page 125.
- Twenty-seven Escape-Valve foods, that you can eat in any reasonable quantity. See page 120.
- "Skim-Shakes"—delicious, satisfying, non-fattening snacks. See page 114.
- Eat this delicious food, and it will probably kill your "uncontrollable" craving for sweets, right on the spot! See page 122.
- Scientific Weight-Loss Charts—detailing the exact amount that you can expect to lose each week with this diet. And why—as has often happened—if you lose twice or even three times the expected amount in the first week or two, you must consider this a lucky bonus, and guard against going off the diet the very next week!
- A strict diet in a strict book? Yes! BUT ONE THAT PRODUCES RESULTS! That gets you off the weight-loss, wait-gain see-saw! And that gives you unexpected aids to final, scientific reducing almost every step of the way. Prove it yourself! Try it at our risk—today!

MEDICALLY PROVEN ON 10,000 PATIENTS. IT WILL GIVE YOU A NEW FIGURE AND A NEW LIFE — IF YOU FOLLOW IT SO RELIGIOUSLY THAT YOU EVEN EAT WHEN IT SAYS TO EAT EVEN IF YOU DON'T FEEL HUNGRY!

Here are a few examples of the "pleasant surprises" you will find throughout this book:

Although, of course, this diet forces you to eat less food overall, it may actually force you to eat MORE food at certain times of the day. For example, if you are like most over-weight people, you are simply going to have to eat MORE for breakfast, whether you want it or not. And this diet allows you OVER THIRTY different kinds of snacks—one between every meal, and one every night before you go to bed.

There is no longer any need to try to STARVE yourself into a weight loss. Because, when you follow this Final Diet, you will quite normally lose up to 100 pounds a year—and never gain a single ounce of it back.

Certain foods, of course, are omitted. But certain other, surprising foods are quite actively included. For example, you are allowed ice cream up to three times a week. (Watch your friends eyes pop open with astonishment when they see you eating that delicious ice cream dessert—and STILL shedding inches and pounds!)

And, at the same time, you'll have sandwiches for lunch, and, if you wish, a cocktail before dinner and wine with it. In other words, there's no punishment in this diet—only scientific eating.

And—very important—if you make a mistake one day (as this doctor KNOWS you're going to make mistakes), and overeat, then he simply does NOT permit you to cut back on your food the next day to "make up" for it! This is the fatal mistake most dieters make that destroys their diet. Instead, he forces you to eat YOUR FULL DIET the next day, and forgive yourself, and go on losing weight.

IS YOUR WEIGHT UNEVENLY DISTRIBUTED? ARE YOU AFRAID THAT DIETING WILL MAKE YOUR FACE LOOK OLDER? DO YOU HABITUALLY OVER-EAT AT PARTIES? THEN HERE AT LAST ARE MEDICAL SOLUTIONS TO EACH OF THESE PROBLEMS.

And—to repeat again—when you follow this Final Diet, you will lose up to 100 pounds a year, and never gain an ounce.

Now let us examine some of the quite remarkable side effects of this diet—documented bonus-benefits that no crash-diet on earth, for example, could ever get you.

In the first place, because of the scientific nature of this diet, it has proven—in case after case—to be of special help to men and women whose excess fat is primarily on or below the waist. It has enabled such men and women—some of whom had been plagued all their adult lives with ugly fat deposits on their hips, thighs and legs—to trim off these ugly bulges WITHOUT losing too much from their bust or face at the same time!

Secondly, because this diet is NOT a crash diet, NOT a torture diet, it does NOT cause the skin of your face to collapse, wrinkle and furrow in that terrible way that crash diets so often do.

On the contrary, if you follow this Final Diet precisely, your face will look younger, and younger, and younger—from almost the very first week. And you will lose up to 100 pounds per year. And never gain an ounce of it back.

And you will be able to lose this weight, and keep it off, despite the parties you attend—despite the business or club lunches and dinners—despite all the "social eating and drinking" everyone of us must do, every week of our lives!

Because this is the first diet you have ever seen that gives you specific techniques for dealing with each one of these "food traps". That allows you to satisfy yourself AND your diet AND your companions—without calling the slightest attention to the fact that you are dieting, and by actually allowing you to SEEM to eat and drink as much as they are, when you are really LOSING POUNDS AND INCHES at the very same moment that they are gaining them!

Yes, even if you attend another business lunch, every day of the week, when you follow this Final Diet, you will lose up to 100 pounds per year, and never gain an ounce of it back.

In fact—

MANY PATIENTS FOUND THIS DIET SO EFFECTIVE THAT THEY LOST TWICE AS MUCH WEIGHT AS THEY HAD ORIGINALLY HOPED TO! HERE'S HOW THEY KEPT THAT WEIGHT OFF, AND WHY YOU WILL TOO.

The proof of this diet, of course, is in the results it produces for YOU. That is why we allow you to read it from cover to cover AT OUR RISK, and why you can try it for thirty full days thereafter without gambling a penny.

Let us make this perfectly clear: The first thing you do when you receive this book, is write down the exact amount of weight you want to lose, right inside it. This may by 10 pounds—20 pounds—40 pounds—or more. It makes no difference.

Then, that same day, you begin the diet. But with THIS thought:

Every one of the 10,000 successful patients who have traveled this road before you, have written down the figure that they wanted to lose. But once they got started—once they learned these new eating habits—many of them simply went FAR BEYOND the weight-loss figure they had first thought would be "perfection" for them!

For example, one woman patient wanted to lose 10 pounds, and be as thin as she was five years before. But as the diet developed, and the fat melted away from her body, she decided to GO ON and lose 20 pounds, and be as slim as she was on the first day she was married!

Why did these patients decide to lose more, and more, and even more weight? FOR THE VERY SAME REASON THAT THEY DID NOT PUT THIS WEIGHT BACK ON AGAIN! Because by following this diet precisely, these men and women LEARNED NEW EATING HABITS. They literally retrained their appetites! They destroyed the fat-causing food patterns that had kept them over-weight for years!

About The Author:

This was by no means easy—but they did it, and you can do it too! And once you have done it, it will be practically impossible for you to eat in the same old fat-causing way that you are eating today!

What will become of little Sue?

Four-year-old Sue-Cha Shen has waited several hours for her stepfather to return. She is too young to realize she has been abandoned.

It was almost dark when one of our staff workers discovered Sue. Later we learned that her real father had been killed in an accident.

Her mother, with five sons and a daughter to support, married in desperation, but the stepfather didn't want little girls, and proceeded to get rid of Sue-Cha.

And what will become of her now? Our homes operate on a severely limited budget, and unless we find a sponsor for Sue—her future looks bleak indeed.

Will you help? The world is full of little Sue-Chas—waiting, looking for happiness, love, a warm meal, a clean dress.

This is why Overseas Children (formerly Christian Herald Industrial Missions in China) opened an orphanage in China, many years ago. And after the Communists forced us out, we moved on to Hong Kong, Formosa, then Korea.

And it seems we always have more orphans than sponsors. This is very dear to my heart. I have held children like Sue-Cha in my arms —innocent victims of a world full of violence.

I urge you to sponsor a needy child. The cost is small, only $10 a month. Besides the child's love and gratitude, you will receive his or her picture, life history, and the chance to exchange letters. Both groups and individuals can sponsor these youngsters.

Please—sit down right now, fill out the sponsor application, write your check for $10 and send it air mail. The need is urgent. A child is waiting for your love. Will you help? Today?

God bless you,

Daniel A. Poling, President

VIRGINIA HAM AGED LIKE VINTAGE WINE

Christmas Tradition for 300 Years!

Smoked for weeks over hand tended fires, kept going day and night, while juices drip and pungent hickory smoke permeates and flavors the meat. Aged a year, then baked with wine and sugar. Arrives ready to serve (doesn't even need heating), for Christmas feast, buffet, cocktails, sandwiches, etc. Traditionally sliced paper thin and served cold; goes a long way; easy to keep; a delight to any homemaker during busy holidays.

300 years ago Virginia planters traded their hams to English sailing masters. Soon the old world's epicures were agog over this new flavor. Virginia Ham became famous around the world. It still is. Each magnificent ham now hanging in our aging rooms has been slowly cured, smoked to a rich mahogany hue, and aged the way the colonists did it 300 years ago. For there is no short cut to such flavor. Just before shipment each ham is soaked, simmered, skinned, the fat trimmed, then sauced with wine and sugar, and baked to a sweet and savory feast of flavor unlike any other!

Nested in burgundy tissue in sturdy Old Virginia Smokehouse box, with carving, keeping, serving suggestions enclosed, here is a grand treat for your family and guests and a magnificent gift! Our hams are prepared to please discerning people. We guarantee complete satisfaction or money refunded. $1.98 per lb., net cooked weight, plus postage (estimated at $1.50 per ham East of the Mississippi and $3.00 West of the Mississippi). Sizes: 8 to 15 lbs. Please specify if wanted now, for Christmas, or other date.

A PURPLE MARTIN will eat 2,000 mosquitoes each day!

Max Sehling Seedsmen invites you to prepare for

...and enjoy mosquito-and-insect free living!

Martin "scouts" arrive in early Spring to survey the housing situation. Martins nest in colonies. When proper nesting facilities have been found, they return to lead martin flocks to the areas selected. Get ready to welcome these friendly, useful birds to your property—by ordering a Trio-Musselman martin house now.

This martin apartment house will attract a colony of beautiful, singing visitors who thrive on mosquitoes and other flying insect pests. A single purple martin will eat 2,000 mosquitoes daily; a flock will consume countless thousands. This means your summertime activities will be more fun, more comfortable. And you'll enjoy watching their graceful flight maneuvers as they search for food.

Scientifically-designed, all-aluminum martin house is sturdily built to last for years. Bright, attractive green and white baked enamel finish will not rust or rot; natural aluminum roof reflects heat, keeps birds cool. Landing floor has guard rail for protection of young. Overall size is 18" x 19" x 16", easily mounted on post.

THE CLOISTERS COLLECTION, THE METROPOLITAN MUSEUM OF ART

At the Cloisters, portraits in 12th-century stone: the peripatetic Eleanor and Henry II.

How to leave home and like it

BY MARION GOUGH

ROYAL ROADS IN OLD FRANCE

Nostalgic stops on modern itineraries through a France few visitors ever see, suggested by the medieval journeyings of Eleanor of Aquitaine, Queen of France and England, Queen of the "Courts of Love."

We first met Eleanor of Aquitaine on Christmas Day last year—in The Cloisters, New York City's jewel-like repository of medieval autrefois. The seasonal strains of hautboy and lute filled tapestried halls and cloistered walks, and it took no effort at all to conjure up dames choisies and preux chevaliers treading a Christmas measure, flashing cloth of gold and ermine against the tawny stone. (This year, December 22 and 23, the ensemble of New York Pro Musica will be in concert here.)

High on a column, paired in strong-jawed sculpture with Henry Plantagenet, her second spouse, Eleanor looked down upon it all in regal satisfaction—at the chapel's charming crèche, at the embracing spruce trees [illegible] with pomegranates, at the tender, freshest greenswarth, laid like a carpet before the holy figures and strewn with a millefleurs of springtime blossoms. It was as if the medieval legend had come to pass and the world indeed had burst into flower on Christmas morning. Eleanor, looking down, had the face of one who cares, a real person rather than a stone paragon. And in the museum's medieval company of stylized saints and primitive naïvetés, this is a face to send you to the catalog.

Here we got the first inkling of what has been confirmed beyond all doubt—this very human Eleanor was an inveterate traveler, and this monumental stone portrait of her and her husband was executed in honor of one of their many "progresses," or full-dress inspection tours, of their respective territories. Besides England, these included the varied lands of Aquitaine, Poitou, Anjou, Normandy, Brittany—all places that commend themselves to any modern traveler in France with the urge to wend his way among lovely, untrod places and savor the sights that pad the bare bones of history. The Cloisters' column, a relic from the Romanesque cloister of Notre-Dame-du-Bourg at Langon near Bordeaux, was carved around 1155 to commemorate a sojourn there.

But that was well along in Eleanor's traveling life, when she was thirty-five, a veteran of the Second Crusade to the Holy Land. (Continued on page 193)

The second time you carpet your living room, look for the things you didn't get the first time. Look for something luxurious, something that's really exquisite.

Look for something that's heavy and durable enough to stay beautiful for years and years.

But don't look at the price.

By this time you realize that with carpeting (like everything else) you get what you pay for.

This is Mohawk's Chevy Chase. In anyone's book, it's a very expensive carpet: $18 a square yard.

But if you've already been stuck with a so-called "bargain" carpet, you know Chevy Chase is worth every penny.

It has a lustrous pile that's so deep and thick it couldn't mat down if you drove a car over it.

Chevy Chase is woven from the very first miracle fiber: wool. And it's not just 100% wool, it's 100% of the best wool.

We haven't just woven Chevy Chase. We've kind of sculptured it with rich, deep-dyed colors that look . . . to be blunt about it . . . very, very expensive.

Of course, it still delivers all those un-elegant things. Like long wear, soil resistance and excellent resiliency.

To carpet an average size living room with Chevy Chase will cost you a small fortune, but it's worth it.

In fact, if you'd carpeted with Chevy Chase the first time, you wouldn't be bothered with "a second time."

This is only one in a series of ads that Mohawk Carpet is running with the following purpose in mind: we plan to take over your house.

With practical carpets for the family room. Luxurious carpets for the dining room. An ingenious idea for the kitchen. Bathroom carpets. Bedroom carpets.

We've gathered many of these ideas and put them together in an exciting little booklet. It's yours for the asking at your Mohawk dealer. If you don't know who he is, write to: Mohawk Carpet, 295 Fifth Ave., N.Y. 1001

CHRISTMAS not only evokes the most star-spangled network of expectations but gathers about it the beautiful robes of tradition. To fulfill the expectations, we have shopped for presents of particular beauty, usefulness, and value. To illumine the tradition, we have gone to the White House, visited Nashville, Tennessee, where they decorate trees in marvelous ways, and toured Nantucket for samplings of their feasts. All tendered with the best wishes from us at House Beautiful.

MR. FEZZIWIG'S BALL. ORIGINAL ETCHING BY JOHN LEECH. FROM BETTMANN ARCHIVE

"The walls and ceiling were so hung with living green, that it looked a perfect grove, from every part of which, bright gleaming berries glistened. The crisp leaves of holly, mistletoe, and ivy reflected back the light, as if so many little mirrors had been scattered there; and such a mighty blaze went roaring up the chimney, as that hearth had never known."

—DICKENS: A Christmas Carol

AN ISLAND CHRISTMAS

Herewith an extravagant cornucopia of the season, a marvelous mix of color and light and good things to eat, all caught in that golden glow of hospitality that makes a Christmas anywhere a luminous island of time in the passage of the mundane year. But this is a special holiday, indeed—Christmas in Nantucket, itself a snug and genial island which many have loved in summer for its salty sun and the sweet and simple perfume of its roses. But it is never more endearing than at Christmastime, when the cobbles of Main Street are frosted with snow, like sugar-powdered yule cakes; its elms hang heavy and diamond-white; and every door is wreathed, glossy-green with holly leaves or, in the early custom, jeweled with garnet hoops of cranberries from the latest harvest. Inside, guarding a tradition of snugness and welcome-home such as only islanders and seafarers ever really understand, the house is burnished bright, the hearth's ablaze, and a potpourri of spice and sugar scents the air. Each window is alight with whale-oil lamp or candle, as in the halcyon whaling days, to beckon home a loved one from the Seven Seas. Feast your eyes on such a scene as it is today yet could have been a century ago in the nostalgic Greek Revival comfort of the Jared Coffin House, a merchant's mansion now become a year-round inn, restored, refurbished, its humor recaptured by Decorator James G. Hendrix of William Pahlmann Associates. From its holiday larder, a profusion of seasonal delicacies from the region and from a world as vast as old-time whalers roamed, to suggest the makings of your own Christmas feastings. Recipes are on page 188.

A Nantucket tradition is the plaice fish, in its own flavorsome way as precious a denizen of the deep as Moby Dick. The Jared Coffin House makes it part of its extensive Christmas Week menu, serves it on Chinese Export porcelain. Shown here in the private dining room, to the light of bayberry candles, the sparkle of Champagne, and the glow of silver hollow ware that reminds you that the island was once famous for its native silversmiths.

The royal roasts of the season enter triumphant—sometimes a baron of beef, sometimes suckling pig, or the crown roast of lamb shown below. This, an ornament of the holidays, pantalooned in fringed foil and spiked with island cranberries, accompanied by topaz jellies, rose hip or tart-sweet beach plum. Above hangs a 19th-century still life of rare riches Nantucket ships brought home for feasting—Sicilian oranges, English walnuts, Scio almonds, Regional fare in the pine-panel taproom, all nostalgic of Nantucket's past—roast partridge and wild rice, home-grown apples and walnuts, Indian pudding in an ironstone dish, the seasonings in casters, the cider poured from a pewter ewer, to the soft light of the old whale lamps. The canvas, a 19th-century still life, celebrates picturesquely the root-vegetable staples of long-ago winters when the island was young.

For 12 days of Christmas, 28 desserts, from ribbon candy to Dobos Torte, crowd the menu, edging out a score of sweet breads on the festive dining-room sideboard. The holiday wreath—a circlet of pine, cranberries, and barleycorn—mimics in color and character a 19th-century documentary wallpaper by Greeff. Urn-shape knife boxes are late 18th-century Sheraton, typical of the rare accoutrements in this rare island inn. Recipes for many dishes shown on these pages are on page 188.

The North Portico entrance to the White House as it looked at Christmastime last year.

CHRISTMAS AT THE WHITE HOUSE

By MARY JEAN KEMPNER

No one needs a Christmas tree more than the President of the United States. Any President, in (or at) any age. When President Johnson first inspects his newly trimmed tree in the Blue Room, chances are that he steps back for a better viewing of the stately fir and its baubles. Only the very young rush a Christmas tree. Their elders take advantage of an infinitesimal pause before surrendering to delight—a moment to contemplate, recall, and above all to hope. Christmas provides a kind of instant perspective.

The White House Christmas is sparsely recorded. Historians concern themselves with war and politics, and even social historians tend to overlook Christmas, laying emphasis on the annual "open house." No invitations were required, and anyone could attend. In 1907, Theodore Roosevelt shook hands with more than 8,500 people on such an occasion; this was considered public-spirited. Christmas was something else again: it was a private matter. (In the past 50 years, a desire for Christmas privacy has led a third of our Presidents to forsake the White House in order to spend the day at "home.")

In the beginning of our country's history, Christmas wasn't even considered very American. The first recorded Christmas trees, for instance, were cut and decorated by Hessian soldiers, homesick mercenaries hired by George III to defeat the Colonists. Christmas was frowned on by the Puritans, who looked upon it as a pagan feast; most American Protestants considered it papist and held aloof from its dangers. (Perhaps they had never heard that Martin Luther himself had gone to the forest and cut a snow-laden tree that he decorated with candles for his children, as a symbol of the beauty of God's universe on the night his Son was born.) As far as America was concerned, Christmas had no official status until 1836, when Alabama became the first state to declare it a legal holiday.

The previous year, however, President Andrew Jackson ordered the White House decked with holly and mistletoe and invited his grandchildren and some of their small friends to hang their stockings in the presidential bedroom. Nearly a hundred years later, Franklin Delano Roosevelt indulged in the same custom. F.D.R. also had the habit of reading Dickens' A Christmas Carol on Christmas Eve with such gusto that the Roosevelt boys still claim their father read "the meanest Scrooge on record." Before breakfast the children and grandchildren gathered around the President's bed to drink orange juice and investigate their stockings, and their boisterous Roosevelt enthusiasm, far from tiring him, seemed to renew his energy. F.D.R. was a true Christmas buff and loved presents—giving or taking, as the case might be. When he received something he particularly liked, he had eyes for nothing else, leaving other gifts unopened and unacknowledged. As Mrs. Roosevelt said, "You can't hurry Franklin when he gets something he enjoys."

Benjamin Harrison had the very first Christmas tree in the White House and considered it such a momentous occasion that he took time off to help the workmen trim it. Theodore Roosevelt, a dyed-in-the-wool conservationist, banned Christmas trees, but one of his irrepressible sons smuggled one into an empty sewing room and trimmed it surreptitiously. Unfortunately the secret leaked—as White House secrets often do—and the culprit barely escaped severe parental wrath through the intervention of the father of conservation, Gifford Pinchot, a family friend who assured the President that no harm came from cutting trees out of densely wooded areas. Calvin Coolidge could enjoy his Christmas only after taking a seven-o'clock walk. The Hoovers delighted in leading lines of caroling children carrying lighted tapers through the darkened White House, where a gayly illuminated tree awaited them. The Eisenhowers had some 26 Christmas trees in and around the grounds.

Wars all too often cast their gloom over the Christmas season. In 1864, William Tecumseh Sherman sent President Lincoln the following message from Georgia: "I beg to present you, as a Christmas gift, the city of Savannah, with 150 guns, and plenty of ammunition, and also 25,000 bales of cotton." Hardly the thing to stuff into a good man's stocking when the losers also happened to be his fellow citizens; Lincoln prayed for peace, not for a bruised and battered city as a "gift." Christmas of 1941 was a time of decision for President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Churchill, meeting in Washington a few weeks after Pearl Harbor. Even so, Churchill found the message to growl into the hearts of an immense radio audience on Christmas Eve: "Let the children of the world have their night of fun and laughter," Churchill said. "Let the gifts of Father Christmas delight their hearts. Let us share their unstinted pleasure before we turn again to the stern tasks in the year that lies before us, resolved that by our sacrifices and daring these same children shall not be robbed of their inheritance or denied their right to live in a free and decent world. And so, in God's mercy, a happy Christmas to you all."

In this unpredictable world, Christmas has a kind of permanence that stems in part from its being very human, with a full complement of faults as well as virtues. A 19th-century rimer, also a genial tease, wrote:

Though rich men sigh and poor men fret
Dear me! We can't spare Christmas yet.

Indeed we can't, not this year or any other. Christmas gives us all a chance for a new look—both forward and back—the precious gift of instant perspective.

On these six pages, a festival of trees photographed just as shown last year to 35,000 visitors to Cheekwood, the 18th-century manor home of the Tennessee Botanical Gardens and Fine Arts Center. Each tree, representing the holiday spirit of a different country, was designed and decorated by cooperating garden clubs under the direction of the Horticultural Society of Davidson County. Many of the characteristic ornaments were handmade by club members (drawings on pages 144-145: how-to-make directions, page 189). The second "Christmas Trees of Many Lands" exhibit will be shown at Cheekwood from December 3rd to 18th.

TREES OF THE NATIONS

Cheekwood's Georgian façade, above, seen in last year's snow. In the grand foyer, right, encircled by an intricately carved balustrade, is a frosted tree from Austria, resembling the snow-laden firs decorated in high alpine villages. Typical of the beautifully detailed ornaments decorating the tree are kripps, fruits carved out and filled with tiny scenes of the Nativity, the Madonna and Child, and golden angels. In Austria, the celebration of the holidays begins on December 5th, with the arrival of Saint Nicholas, and continues until Epiphany, on January 6, when the Wise Men appear.

With all its ornaments fashioned of straw, the Christmas tree from Lithuania, below left, is enchantingly delicate and fragile. In this tiny agricultural country, straw is a reminder of the past harvest and a wish for abundant crops in the year to come. The Christmas Elf, who brings presents to Lithuanian children, sways inside a teardrop. Tiny angels, with touches of red yarn on their robes, hang beneath sheaves of wheat. Birds made of milkweed pods perch inside straw cages, and stars hang throughout the tree. Straw crosses are backed with red felt, and garlands cascade from the highest angel, formed from a whisk broom.

In Japan, Christmas was not widely celebrated until the beginning of the 20th Century, when the holiday became familiar to the Japanese through the products made there for Christmas celebrations around the world. Many have now adopted Christmas as a secular holiday devoted to the love of children. The tree is usually decked with paper ornaments, small toys, and dolls. Here the tree is symbolized with gold paper fans and wind chimes.

The crèche is the oldest and most significant symbol of Christmas, first created by St. Francis in the Middle Ages. The one shown at Cheekwood, right, was inspired by the sacred paintings of the Renaissance. Using one of the carved fireplaces of the manor as a background, these Italianate figures in rich colors and elaborate fabrics capture the splendor of that time. The American Christmas tree, below right, stands in the place of honor at the foot of the Queen Charlotte staircase. In a typical American blend of customs from many lands, it is covered with brightly colored glass balls, golden garlands, and showers of glittering tinsel.

Many holiday traditions originated in England, but it was not until Victoria's German husband, Albert, brought the Christmas tree from his native land that the custom became popular in England. This tree, above, has been trimmed as that royal tree might have been: candy and sugar plums tucked into cornucopias and silver-filigree baskets; tiny packages wrapped in brocade, velvet, and bright ribbons; red-golden swags; and a gossamer angel.

On this page, trees from six European countries, each with distinctive ornaments. Clockwise, from the top: A tree from Germany, the land where, legend has it, the fir became a symbol of the season. The decorations, a star made of red-and-white paper, gingerbread cookies, white doves, paper star chains, birds, and tiny horns. In Sweden years ago the fresh green branches of the Christmas tree symbolized the hope for an early spring after a cold, hard winter. On their tree, right, are wooden ornaments in the form of Tompte the Elf, angels, and straw baskets full of nuts. The hand-dipped white candles are often balanced by apples hung below—the traditional apple sticks. Below it, the Polish tree is gaily covered with paper ornaments of peacocks, porcupines, bright shields, garlands, and angels. A branch of the Dutch tree, bottom, is decked with sugar bells, Kerstkrans—wreathlike cookies that the children pluck off to eat—and chocolate cookies in the form of Saint Nicholas. To express the opulence of Czarist Russia are, left, large ornate balls and brilliant glass prisms. Denmark's tree, above left, is adorned with a chain of the country's flag, bells, toy soldiers, silver stars, and red-heart mobiles. Opposite: Outside Cheekwood stands a bird-feeding tree that originated in Northern Europe, where ice and snow make it difficult for birds to survive the long winter. On the tree are orange baskets filled with raisins and suet, popcorn balls and strings, doughnuts, apples, and a bread star studded with cranberries. More

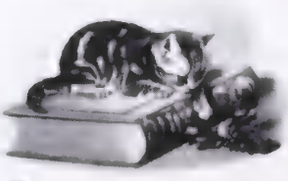
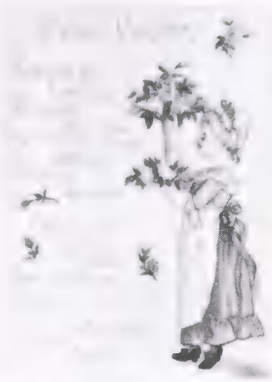
Merry Christmas





If you were choosing a card in the 1880's

You would find no such cosmopolitan variety as today offers. Though a handful of Christmas cards cannot show the full range available in any era, the sampling here, from a large treasure trove of old-timers, hints at what was around in that long-ago decade. Throughout the collection, the designs have a charming colloquial quality. Flowers abound. Flowers and birds familiar to local gardens. Children and pets. Sometimes a star, a bell. Seldom a Santa Claus. Rarer still, the reproduction of a masterpiece. The prevailing mood, rural and innocent. And surely some of these artists created valentines after the Christmas rush was over. Then, as now, however, the cards' intent is the same: to convey good will, good wishes, the hope of happy times to come. Perhaps even international art has found no surer way to express such a hope than by picturing the young at play, the flowers blooming so promisingly out of season.

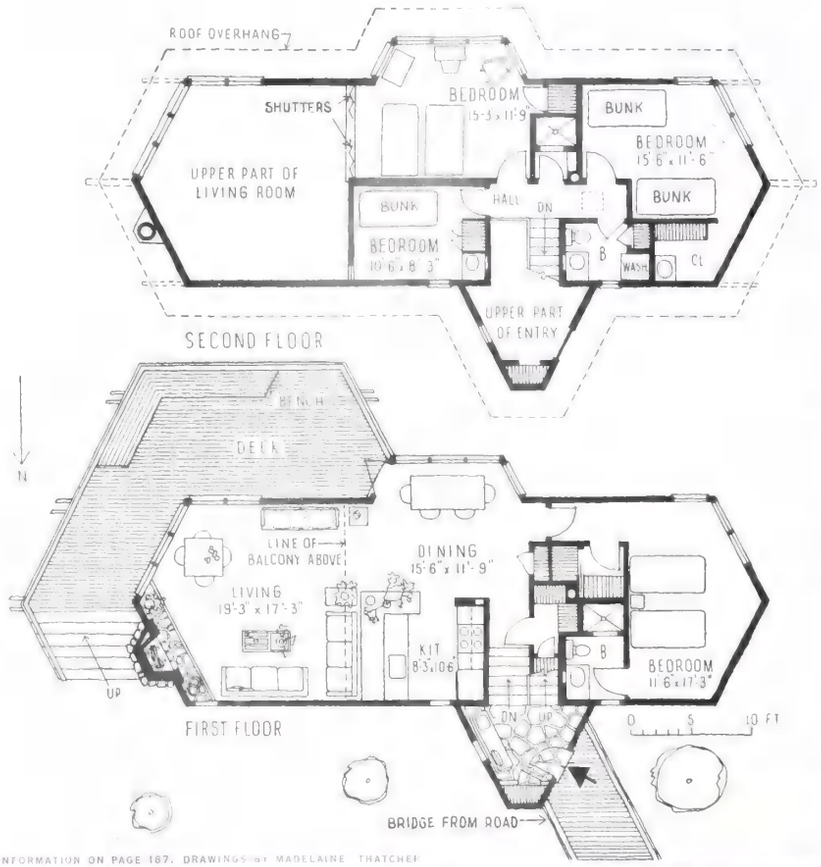
The high drama of tall mountains and big trees can be immeasurably enhanced by tall architecture, the lofty interior spaces that such architecture makes possible, and the judicious use of natural materials. This spacious ski retreat—which will be just one year old this Christmas—has already so enhanced its rugged, forested slope at Alpine Meadows, California, that it seems always to have been there.



Designed by Architect Dan Volkmann (of the San Francisco firm of Volkmann & Stockwell) for his own family of six, this snug shelter can sleep as many as twelve, and—although conceived as a deep-winter house for a family of dedicated skiers—it looks and functions well in all seasons. Its utility derives from sound planning and the skillful conquest of a precipitous terrain. Its attractiveness lies in its thoughtfully proportioned verticality and owes much to the sensitive use, inside and out, of natural California redwood. Whether etched against the hushed snows of winter or framed by summer greenery, the glowing hues of this durable lodge give it a warm and welcoming presence in its primeval environment. More views of this house on the next two pages. By JAMES DE LONG

The towering living-room ceiling, opposite page, is raftered with 4″ by 4″ redwood timbers, separated to show the prepainted undersurface of their covering layer of plywood roof sheathing. Floor plans, at left, reveal hexagonal derivations that hint at the crystalline pattern of the snowflake—and greatly facilitate human movement throughout the interior spaces. The stone-paved, split-level entry, below, provides a handy stomping-off place for removal of wet ski boots. From the living room, shown at lower left, the flowing spaces of the open plan lead freely to the kitchen, the dining area, and the master bedroom beyond. The high expanse of white gypsum board at this end of the room creates an artful contrast to the predominantly redwood wall surfaces elsewhere. Slender wood marking strips call attention to the shuttered lookout from bedroom above. Ceiling of this cozy loft, bottom right, swoops low over windows to filter the view through glistening icicles.

Four famous musicians choose FAVORITE RECORDS TO GIVE

Because the records they like may inspire your own Christmas shopping, we asked four great musicians to recommend a few they would most like to share with friends. They modestly refrained from selecting their own work, but we have listed their most significant new recordings on page 187

ERICH LEINSDORF

Music Director, The Boston Symphony Orchestra

The whole idea of a gift is that it be something special. For this reason a multirecord set—say an opera—is a good choice for this special season.

A magnificent gift would be Die Götterdämmerung, a six-record set with Birgit Nilsson and Dietrich Fischer-Dieskau, with the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra, Georg Solti conducting. London 4004 (1004).

This year there should be much sentiment attached to the three-record set, Opening Nights at the Met. RCA Victor LM-6171 (not available in stereo). It features great stars in recordings of roles they sang on opening nights through 60 years at the old Metropolitan Opera House.

There is now speculation that Anton Bruckner may be the next "in" composer with the musical elite. An interesting gift would be the fine release—Bruckner's Symphony No. 7 by the Columbia Symphony, Bruno Walter conducting. Columbia M2L-290 (M2S-690).

Of course a safe gift is always the latest original-cast Broadway show album. This year it could be Mame. Columbia KOL-6600 (KOS-3000); or that sensational sleeper, Man of La Mancha. Kapp-4505 (S-4505).

LEONTYNE PRICE

Soprano of the Metropolitan Opera

I think that any gift should reflect the giver's own tastes. If our choice is not exactly what someone else would choose for himself, so much the better. We have then given a true gift—something beyond.

Thinking back over the past year's listening—for which there was too little time—these are some of the albums I have particularly enjoyed:

Frank Sinatra: Strangers in the Night. Reprise 1017 (S1017), and Forever Frank. Capitol T-2602.

Peggy Lee is a favorite, and I especially like Guitars à la Lee. Capitol T-2469 (ST-2469). And also the Peter Nero album [illegible]. Victor LPM-3550 (LSP-3550); and Porgy and Bess [illegible] by the Modern Jazz Quartet. Atlantic 1440 (S-1440). I [illegible] anything by André Previn.

On the more serious side, I find Bach's Cantata #202 (the wedding cantata) and Schubert's Salve regina most inspiring and relaxing. There are a number of good recordings of the Bach, but now there seems to be only one listing for the Schubert—Westminster 19092 (17092).

GLENN GOULD

Concert pianist

Henze: The Symphonies of Hans Werner Henze. Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra, a two-record set. DGG 29203 4 (139203 4). I find this the season's most impressive and most generous retrospective.

Bach: The Brandenburg Concerti. Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra. Herbert Von Karajan conducting. Three records: DGG-18976 8 (38976 8). Karajan sometimes reminds me of the late Dimitri Mitropoulos because of his seemingly grudging concessions to baroque scholarship. Thus, on these discs, impeccable phrasing, unarguable tempi, but far too many strings, too distant cembalo. Yet, even in its fuzzy way, rather wonderful.

Chopin: Sonata No. 3. Robert Casadesus, pianist. Columbia ML 6242 (MS 6842). I find that I can live quite nicely without Frédéric François's sonatas, but have always felt that if one is to do them, one should surely do them straight. This is the best performance of the Sonata I've heard.

Ruggles: Sun-Treader. Columbia Symphony. Columbia ML 6201 (MS 6801). Not yet have I been able to bring myself to sign the "Ives for Mount Rushmore" petition, for despite his remarkably inventive mind, I've always been put off by the sheer garrulousness of his manner. But I find myself completely won over by the pointedly laconic language of his Yankee contemporary, Carl Ruggles.

MORTON GOULD

Composer and conductor

Gift records are spices one adds to a friend's musical cuisine, and these are a few, I think, that have distinctive flavors. Should you be surprised at the Beatles record, you might like to try it as a gift to yourself.

Beatles. Revolver. Capitol T-2576 (ST-2576).

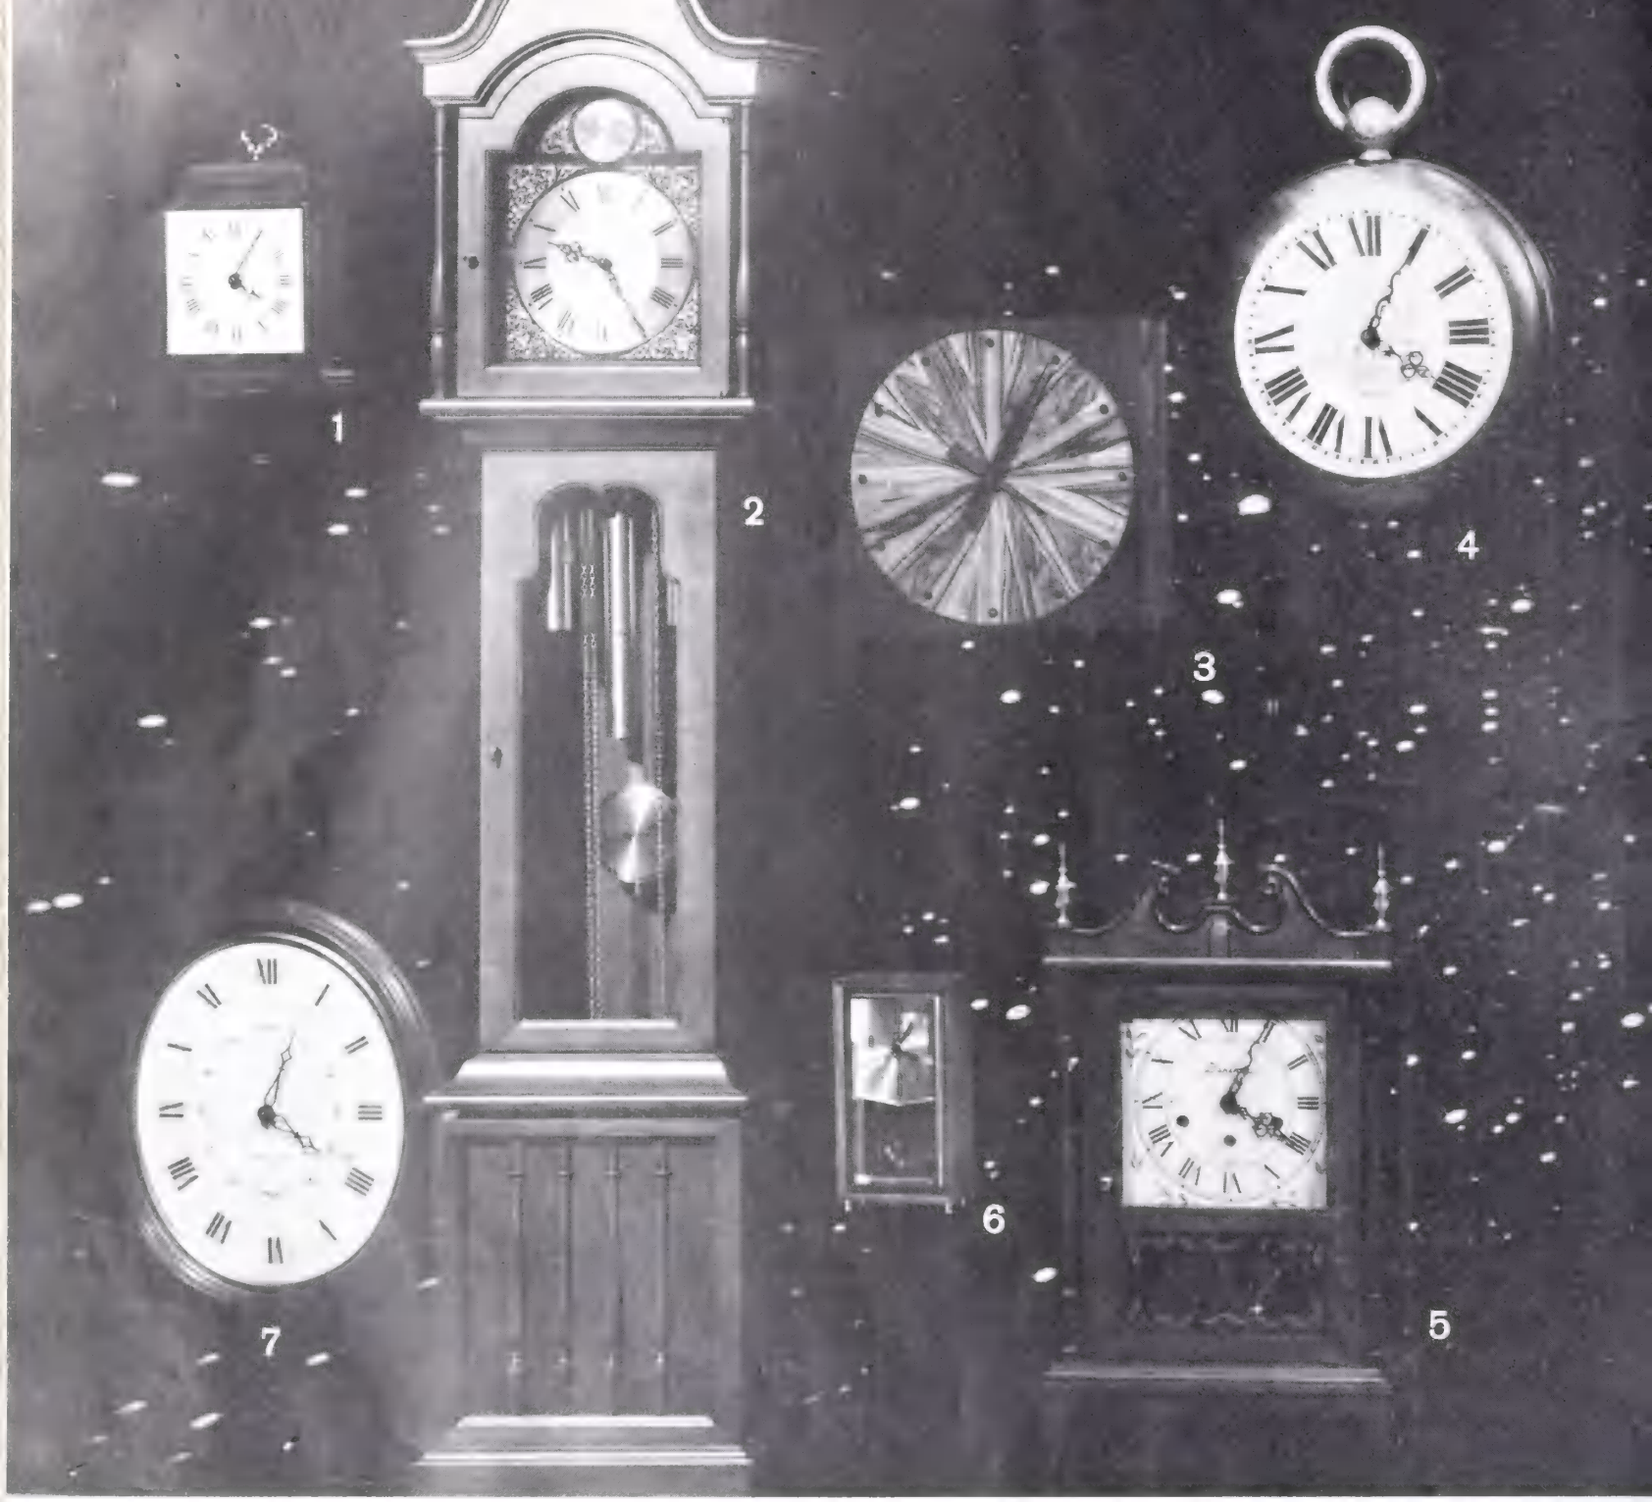
Edgard Varèse may not be the easiest of all composers to understand, but anyone with an interest in what's happening today will find him rewarding. Varèse: Arcana. Chicago Symphony Orchestra. Jean Martinon conducting. Victor LM-2941 (LSC-2941).

Benny Goodman, to my ear, can do no wrong—especially in Meeting at the Summit. Columbia ML-6205 (MS-6205).

I can't imagine anyone who would not enjoy Baroque Guitar with Julian Bream. Victor LM 2878 (LSC-2878).



And, finally, the original-cast album of Man of La Mancha, Kapp 4505 (S-4505).

Thirteen Clocks

The black oak room was bright with flaming torches, but brighter with the light of Saralinda. The cold eye of the Duke was dazzled by the gleaming of a thousand jewels that sparkled on the table. His ears were filled with chiming as the clocks began to strike.

The pleasant land of counterpane.

The Tea Party

In the pleasant green Garden
We sat down to tea:
"Do you take sugar?" and

We all were as happy
As happy could be,
On that bright Summer's day
When she asked us to tea.

ORCHIDS continued from page 154

Orchids are among the most demanding plants on earth to grow, and also among the easiest. It all depends on the kind. Those shown on pages 154-155 are easy, for all their beauty. There are many other undemanding orchids; most catalogs set these apart from those that require expert care.

The following general instructions apply to the orchids that are considered the easiest to grow.

Watering

Use tepid water—60 to 70 degrees—for orchids. Cold water shocks them. Other than this, there are few dependable rules for watering. All conditions must be considered: the size of the pot (small ones dry out more quickly than larger ones); the temperature (the warmer it is the more quickly the water evaporates); the potting material (fir bark dries out more quickly than osmunda). Light is another factor. Water evaporates more quickly on a bright day than on a cloudy one. In general, let the potting material get almost dry, and then water thoroughly.

Light and ventilation

Orchids need considerable light. The easy-to-care-for types, which we're considering here, will do well in a south or west window. Put them near the window so they get all the available sun.

They must have bottom ventilation. This is absolutely necessary. Set the pots on a lattice of redwood strips over gravel-filled metal containers.

Humidity and temperature

Orchids require less humidity than you might think: 30 to 50 percent is plenty for most of them. If you have only a few plants, it's easy to mist the area around them to increase humidity. Use a window-cleaning bottle or other mist sprayer. Runoff and evaporation of excess water draining from the plants creates a microclimate with plenty of humidity for healthy growth.

The temperature of the average living room—65 to 75 degrees—is good for most orchids. At night a drop of 10 to 15 degrees is essential. Cultivated plants, like those in nature, benefit from cool evenings. Because most orchids are air plants, give them good air circulation without drafts.

Potting and repotting

If you are giving orchids for Christmas, it's best to send potted plants rather than bare-root plants that must be potted on arrival. The last thing anyone needs in the busy holiday season is to drop everything to cope with the unfamiliar task of orchid-potting.

Basically, orchids are of two types: terrestrials, which grow in soil like most other plants, and epiphytes, which cling to branches of trees. Both are grown in standard clay pots or the special orchid pots with slotted sides to increase air circulation around the roots. Orchid pots are available at garden centers and florist shops. Epiphytic orchids are also grown on pieces of tree fern. When it is time to repot, use the same kind of material in which the plant was originally grown.

A supply of osmunda (a material derived from the roots of ferns) or fir bark (the chopped bark of various evergreens) is necessary for potting plants. The bark comes in several grades—small, medium, large—and can be used as it comes from the package. Osmunda must be soaked overnight in water and then cut in small pieces before use for potting. For epiphytes, use either mix. For terrestrials, combine one part humus and one part leaf mold with shredded chunks of osmunda.

It's time to repot an orchid when the potting mix disintegrates to a texture more like soil than its original form. Bark lasts about two years, osmunda three to four.

Perfect drainage is essential. Put a two-inch bed of small stones or clean broken pieces of clay pots in the container. Set the orchid plant in place and fill in and around it with the mix. Press the material down with a stick.

Do not water immediately. Mist the entire plant thoroughly, and begin watering it regularly in a week or ten days.

Where to buy

The cost of orchid plants of the kind we're considering here ranges from about $10 to $35, shipped prepaid, depending on size and type. If there are no orchid specialists in your area, the following firms can serve you by mail. Alberts & Merkel Bros. Inc., P.O. Box 537, Boynton Beach, Florida; Ashcroft Orchids, 19062 Ballinger Way N.E., Seattle, Washington; Hausermanns Orchids, Box 363, Elmhurst, Illinois; Margaret Ilgenfritz Orchids, Monroe, Michigan; Lager & Hurrell, 426 Morris, Summit, New Jersey. ■

What good is a dishwasher detergent if it's no good in your water?

Every dishwasher detergent manufacturer knows that no one dishwasher detergent works equally well in all kinds of water. Yet nobody does anything about it — except the makers of FINISH. They have developed special formulas of FINISH for different types of water. Before they send your Special Formula FINISH into your area they test it in various types of water prevalent in your area. They make sure that your Special Formula FINISH washes dishes cleaner and shines glasses brighter than any other detergent.

It stands to reason that the world's largest producers of dishwasher detergents wouldn't go so far out of their way to give you a better product if it weren't important. Nor would the manufacturers of all 28 makes of dishwashers approve it. Do you consider it important enough to try your Special Formula FINISH in your dishwasher?

A Feast of Nantucket Recipes

Crown Roast of Pork

1 6- to 7-pound rack of pork
3 teaspoons salt
Freshly ground pepper
1 teaspoon thyme
½ teaspoon nutmeg
2 carrots, coarsely chopped
2 onions, skin on, coarsely chopped
2 large cloves garlic, skin on, crushed
Large bunch parsley
Large bunch celery leaves or 3 stalks, coarsely chopped
4 or 5 whole cloves
3 bay leaves
1¾ cups dry white wine or dry vermouth
2 cans (10½-ounce size) consommé
Juice 1 lemon

Have your butcher make the rack of pork into a crown, filling the center with the ground-up odds and ends of the pork. At the same time, ask him to give you enough paper frills to decorate the tips of the crown, once it is roasted. Combine the salt, pepper, thyme, and nutmeg, and rub the crown well, inside and out, with this mixture. Cover the tips of the crown with foil to keep them from burning.

Place all the vegetables, cloves, and bay leaves in the bottom of a shallow roasting pan, and the roast on a rack on top. Pour 1 cup of wine and 1 can of consommé over the pork.

Place in a preheated 325° oven and roast uncovered, basting occasionally, until a meat thermometer reaches 165° to 170°. Lacking a thermometer, allow approximately 30 minutes per pound.

When crown is cooked, sprinkle with the lemon juice, place on a warm platter, and keep warm.

Pour any fat off the roasting pan, add the remainder of the wine and consommé. Bring up to a boil and boil down rapidly over a high heat, scraping the bottom and sides of the pan. When you have a very rich sauce, somewhat syrupy, strain into a warm sauce bowl.

Remove the foil from the tips of the roast, replace with the white frills, and garnish with a bouquet of watercress. Serves 6 to 8.

Partridge in Casserole

Salt
12 strips larding pork
¼ pound (1 stick) butter
4 medium-size truffles, sliced very thin
2 cans (7½-ounce size) beef gravy
1½ cups Madeira wine
½ cup Cognac

If the partridges have any pin feathers on them (likely, since they're wild game), singe them off over a flame. Truss, if your butcher has not already done so. Rub the skins of the birds with a little salt. Place 3 strips of the pork lengthwise down each bird and tie with a string securely. Place in a large roasting pan, giving them plenty of elbow room, with half the butter, and roast in a preheated 425° oven for 30 minutes. Remove the larding pork, and roast another 10 minutes to brown. Baste once or twice.

Shortly before the birds are cooked, heat the remaining butter in a very large, heavy casserole with a tight-fitting lid (if one isn't large enough, use two). Add the sliced truffles, and sauté for a few minutes. Stir in the gravy and wine. Bring up to a boil, stirring until the sauce is smooth. Then stir in the Cognac. Place the partridges in the casserole, spoon some of the sauce over them, cover, return to the oven, and continue roasting at the same high temperature for 15 minutes. Serves 6.

Arrange birds on a hot platter, with bouquets of watercress and the sauce on the side.

Indian Pudding

3 cups milk
¼ cup corn meal
¼ cup sugar
½ teaspoon salt
Pinch baking soda
½ teaspoon ground ginger
½ teaspoon ground cinnamon
2 eggs, well beaten
¼ cup molasses
Heavy cream (optional)

Butter a 1-quart casserole well.

Heat 2 cups of the milk in the top of a double boiler. When hot, dribble in the corn meal, stirring constantly with a wooden spoon, for 15 minutes or until the mixture is thick. Take off the heat.

Mix the sugar, salt, soda, ginger, cinnamon, and eggs together, and stir into the corn-meal mixture.

Combine the molasses with the remaining cup of cold milk, then mix thoroughly into the first mixture.

Pour into the prepared casserole and bake in a preheated 275° oven for 2 hours. Serve warm with heavy cream, plain or whipped. Some people prefer vanilla ice cream, and if you would follow tradition, a sprinkling of freshly ground nutmeg. Serves 6 to 8.

Squash Pie

Pastry for a 9-inch pie shell
1 package frozen Hubbard squash, thawed
3 eggs, slightly beaten
1 cup heavy cream
¼ cup Cognac
1 cup sugar
1 teaspoon cinnamon
1 teaspoon nutmeg
½ teaspoon ginger
¼ teaspoon ground nutmeg
½ teaspoon salt
Whipped cream (optional)

Line a 9-inch pie shell with pastry (your own or a mix). Refrigerate.

Stir the thawed squash into the beaten eggs, along with the cream and Cognac. Combine all remaining ingredients, and stir into the squash mixture thoroughly.

Pour into the unbaked pie shell and bake in a preheated 450° oven for 10 minutes. Reduce heat to 300° and bake 45 to 50 minutes longer or until a knife plunged into the outer edge comes out dry. Cool, but do not chill. Serve with or without whipped cream.

Mince Pie

Pastry for a 2-crust pie
1 firm, ripe apple, peeled and chopped
¾ cup seeded raisins
¼ cup Cognac
2 cups prepared mincemeat
Butter
2 egg yolks, well beaten

Prepare the pastry (your own or a mix) and line the bottom of a 9-inch pie pan. Save the remainder of the pastry to use on top. Refrigerate.

Mix the chopped apple, raisins, and Cognac into the mincemeat thoroughly. Dot the pie shell with bits of butter, pile the mincemeat on top. Cover with the top crust, seal, then slash in two or three places to allow the steam to escape. Brush the top with the beaten yolks and bake in a preheated 450° oven for 30 minutes. Serve warm.

New England Plum Pudding

¼ pound beef suet
¼ apple, chopped fine
½ cup whole almonds, grated
2 tablespoons chopped candied orange peel
2 tablespoons chopped candied lemon peel
⅔ cup chopped citron
1½ cups seedless raisins
1 cup currants
1 tablespoon cinnamon
1½ teaspoons ginger
¼ teaspoon nutmeg
½ teaspoon allspice
¼ teaspoon salt
1 cup sugar
⅓ cup strawberry preserves
2 cups fine dry bread crumbs
2 tablespoons milk
⅓ cup rum
⅓ cup dry white wine
4 egg yolks, well beaten

Grease a 1½-quart mold or pudding pan (that has a cover) very well. Set aside.

Combine the beef suet, apples, nuts, other fruits, spices, salt, sugar, preserves, and bread crumbs. Mix together thoroughly.

Stir the milk, rum, and wine into the beaten yolks; then, with your hands, combine with the fruit mixture.

Place batter in the prepared mold, pressing it down firmly. Cover tightly and place in a large kettle. Add enough hot water to reach to a depth of 4 inches. Cover the kettle, bring water to a boil, reduce heat to moderate. Steam for 5 to 5½ hours. If the water boils away, add additional boiling water. When the pudding is cooked, take out of the kettle, and allow to stand a few minutes before turning out of the mold. Serves 8. Serve warm with:

Hard Sauce
½ cup butter
1½ cups sifted confectioners' sugar
1 egg yolk
Cognac or rum to taste
Candied cherries

Work the butter with an electric beater or your hands until soft. Add the sugar gradually, beating constantly. When very smooth and creamy, beat in the egg yolk. Perfume with Cognac or rum. To serve, place in an attractive bowl and garnish with candied cherries.

Seven Layer Cake

6 eggs, separated
¾ cup sugar
1 cup sifted all-purpose flour

Grease two or three 8-inch layer-cake pans thoroughly. Line the bottoms with waxed paper. Set aside.

Beat yolks with an electric beater or in the electric mixer until very thick. Gradually add the sugar, beating constantly, until the mixture makes ribbons. This calls for a good 15 minutes of steady beating, all told.

Beat the egg whites until they stand in shiny peaks when you hold up the beater. Whip about a third into the batter vigorously with a wire whip. Fold in remainder carefully with a rubber spatula.

Spread a thin layer of the batter in each of the pans evenly, to the very edge. Place on the lower rack of a preheated 350° oven for 8 to 10 minutes or until lightly browned. Cool on a cake rack for a couple of minutes. Then lift the pans off, peel off the paper carefully, and cool cake layers on the rack. Repeat until you have used all the batter and have baked seven layers.

When cool, spread Chocolate Butter Cream between the layers, around the sides, and over the top.

Chocolate Butter Cream
5 squares (1-ounce size) unsweetened chocolate
4 egg yolks, well beaten
½ cup sugar
3 tablespoons strong coffee concentrate
¼ pound (1 stick) sweet butter, softened

Melt the chocolate over hot, not boiling, water. Combine the sugar gradually with the beaten yolks, beating until mixture is very thick and pale. Stir in the melted chocolate and the coffee. Place over hot water and cook, stirring constantly, about 5 minutes. Take off the heat, add the butter bit by bit, beating hard after each addition. Cool until the cream is of spreading consistency. ■

How to make the world-wide ornaments

The instructions below may be varied according to the materials available. In making the ornaments, occasional reference to the drawings on pages 144-145 may be useful.

Cornucopia

Cut a piece of shirt board as shown below. Cover with desired material, join with glue or staples to form cone, then trim with lace, ribbon, or flowers. For the handle, cover a piece of pipe cleaner with braid or ribbon and staple to cone.

Basket

Place a plastic doily, about 10" in diameter, on a 3½" by 3½" wood block. Thumb-tack center of doily to block, then bring down the doily sides to the sides of the block. Tack all four sides. Place in a preheated open oven, 350°. Mold and pinch sides and corners as the plastic softens. Next, submerge block, with basket still thumb-tacked, into a container of ice water to harden. When hard, remove basket, staple corners, spray with silver or gold paint, and let dry. Lace silver or gold braided cord through filigree edge of basket, extending ends 5" to form handle. Tie at center.

Porcupine

Cut 12 circles, 4" in diameter, from white paper. Draw a circle the size of a quarter in the center of each disc. Make six equally spaced cuts in the discs from the outer edge to the inner circle (dotted lines on drawing below).

Roll each segment around a pencil point to form a conical spike. Fasten with clear glue. Slip pencil out when glue is dry. Scatter touches of glue over discs: place glitter in saucer, and put each disc into glitter while glue is still wet. With a large needle and white cord, fasten a white button to a disc, run thread through all 12 discs, and attach another button on top. Squeeze discs together. While holding these, run needle down through discs and buttons again. Leave a long cord for hanging.

German Star

The traditional German Star is as intricately made as a Japanese puzzle. Facsimiles can be made by cutting out an eight pointed star from colored construction paper. Make four loops of contrasting construction paper or of fancy ribbon, and glue from the center out (drawing on page 144).

Kripps

Originally made of beeswax, we recommend using hollow polyethylene fruit. Cut out opening, approximately 1½" wide and 1¾" high, with razor blade. Spray interior with gold or silver paint. Let dry. Using self-adhering velvet ribbon, cut four strips to frame the opening, and attach. Glue gold or silver trimming to ribbon. From a small-scale scene of a Christmas card, cut picture approximately 2" wide by 2½" high. Edge with trimming. Stuff back half of fruit with crumpled tissue paper. Gently curve picture so it will go through opening and form a diorama inside. Small hanging ornaments (angels, etc.) may be used instead. Back with spun glass (angel hair). Attach gold cord to angel, then run it through the top of fruit, tying or gluing it to the stem. Cut two connected leaves of velvet, knotting them around the stem by the connecting strip. (See drawing of completed kripps, page 144.)

Tompte the Elf

On a lathe, make a conical shape out of lightweight wood, 6" high and 1½" across the bottom. Paint in desired colors, following photograph (page 142). Fasten hook or wire on back side of cap.

Toy Soldier

Cut soldier shape from a piece of ¼" white pine, 7½" long and 3¾" wide. Paint with tempera paints, and shellac.

Drums

From a shirt cardboard, cut a strip 10" long, 1½" wide. Glue or staple to join. Cover open ends with white paper, the sides with colored wrapping paper. Strips of velvet around edges will cover the joins. Trim with gold braid held in place with color-head pins.

Russian Balls

Cut six pieces of velvet (see pattern below) on the bias. (A 5" Styrofoam ball needs a 7" length of velvet.) Attach each piece to Styrofoam ball, pinning along edges, starting from the center of the ball and stretching to top and bottom. Overlap edges and continue applying pieces until ball is covered. Use 12" pipe cleaners cut in half for hanger. Insert firmly into top of ball and bend extended end. Overlay pinned seams with bands of trimming. For petal design, cut twelve 3½" pieces of velvet, shaped as above. Starting from hanger, center petals between seams, and pin with decorative sequins. Repeat at bottom.

Lithuanian Angels

With three pieces of reed, approximately 27" long, encircle a round object to hold the reeds in circular form while you tape them together at the ends with strips of masking tape. Thread needle with wet raffia and weave reeds together, taking raffia under one, over the next, and around the third reed. Weave right through the masking tape. A paper clip under the masking tape helps strengthen the circle. Wrap raffia around all exposed masking tape, inserting four pieces of preserved wheat at the same time, two on each side. For each angel, use 12 pieces of wet straw, 12" long. Fold each piece in half and twist florists' wire around fold to hold straw together. Make round circle of wire 2" in diameter. Bring straws over wire circle ½" from bottom of skirt. Weave red yarn around straw and wire. Trim straw at bottom. (See drawing, page 145.) For wings, cut six 4" pieces of wet straw. Place together on flat surface, pinch in center, twist wires around center, and weight with heavy object until dry. Wire wings to top of skirt and bring wire up through hole in ¾" wooden-bead head. Twist wire into loop at top. Shape ends of wings and cover all wire with raffia. Make three angels and hang from circle with wire.

Elf in Teardrop

Make straw teardrop shaped in same way as circle above. To make the elf, bend a 14" length of copper wire in half and shape for body and legs. Secure a 5" length of wire across body for arms. Fold piece of cotton for face and cover with piece of nylon stocking. Fasten to top of wire frame. Attach two circles of white felt with black bead at center for eyes; red bead or tiny piece of red nylon stuffed with cotton for nose. Wire piece of cotton to frame. Cut a long strip of red felt 2½" wide, fold, stitch along edge, and turn inside out. Cut in small lengths and slide over arms and legs—ripping back enough to lap over body. Cut square of burlap for tunic, fringe edges, cut hole in center, and slip over head. Tie around body with red cord. Cut two triangles of red felt for hat. Stitch, turn inside out, and sew on tassel. Sew to elf's head. Wrap wrists with raffia. Cut two pieces of burlap for shoes. Fold in edges and sew to feet, turning up toes. Glue on cotton beard. Braid long pieces of burlap, attach at back of neck, at cap, and at top of teardrop. Loop end to form hook.

Lithuanian Star

Make two triangles from six pieces of reed, 7½" long, wiring ends together. Place one triangle on the other to form a six-pointed star. Place two more pieces of reed on top, crossed in center. Wire all connections together, covering wire with red twine at all joints. (See drawing, page 145.) For sunburst at center, align seven pieces of wet straw 4" long on table, pinch at center, and hold together with wire. Trim. Repeat with seven more pieces. Wire the two together, one running horizontally, one vertically. Wire to center of star and cover wire with twine.

Lithuanian Chain

Cut two pieces of reed 5" long, wire at ends. Cut piece of reed 12" long, soak, then twist reed into double circle. Insert into center of loop and wire to sides. Begin next section within the first. Cover all wire with red twine. ■

In company with her monkish first husband, Louis VII, King of the Franks, (whom she had married when she was 15), Eleanor had crossed Rhine, Danube, and Bosphorus. She had with wit, chic, and the elegance of her entourage electrified the brilliant Eastern courts of Byzantium and Antioch, been ambushed in the Syrian hills, seen Jerusalem, departed the great fortress-port of Acre, been shipwrecked off Sicily, and unenthusiastically reunited in Italy with Louis. The route home took them to Naples, the Abbey of Monte Cassino, and a visit with Pope Eugenius; then over the Alps to the great Abbey of Cluny, which Eleanor's ancestors had founded, and on to Paris with, one supposes, a thanksgiving round of Paris holy places—St. Germain-des-Prés, Mont-Ste.-Geneviève, St. Denis.

It was not pure piety or even sheer boredom that set these noble folk off on their perpetual journeys, but rather the business of consolidating their lands, keeping subject vassals in their place, and an eye on any threats to their boundaries. At this kind of business it can only be imagined that Eleanor was an early career woman, and of the deadlier variety, at that. Even as a jeune pucelle of 15, she was described by the chroniclers as charming, welcoming, and lively, to say nothing of green-eyed, flirtatious, and astonishingly well informed, tutored in the sophisticated, literate tradition of the Poitou counts, raised within earshot of fascinating worldly gossip and probably with the great monastic libraries of Cluny and Limoges available for settling arguments. Moreover, she came of a lively, colorful, strong-willed line — descended from Charlemagne himself, the granddaughter of William IX, bon vivant, troubadour, as outrageously daring as he was romantic. She was the precocious child-inheritor of more land than the King himself, with more vassals to keep in hand than most. She was born in 1122 at Nieuil-sur-l'Autise or Bordeaux or Belin, daughter of Anor of Châtellerault and William X of Poitou. By the time she was 13 she had visited, on family chevauchée, as those noble check-up expeditions were called, all of Aquitaine, most of Poitou, with specific sojourns at the monastery of Parthenay, St. Jean d'Angély Saintes, Bordeaux, Niort, the monastery at Nieuil where her mother was buried, the Abbey of St. Maixent, and Talmont.

When her father the Duke died suddenly on pilgrimage at Santiago de Compostela in Spain, Eleanor was made a ward of King Louis the Fat, who promptly married her and her territories to his son. When young Louis and his barons came to claim the bride, Eleanor was living in the Ombrière palace in romantic, semi-tropical, elegant Bordeaux, and it is said that the northern visitors could hardly credit the charm of the wines, the cuisine, and the general amenities in this Languedoc, or land of the troubadours. The ceremony took place in full panoply on a midsummer Sunday in the church of St. André, the streets decked with green boughs and banners; but the young couple dashed off in great haste, not from ardor, but to avoid potential ambush by enemy vassals. They spent their bridal night nearly 50 miles away in the château stronghold of Taillebourg near Saintes. Next stop on was Poitiers, seat of Poitou, center also of a charming, lackadaisical society at this point. The honeymoon was interrupted, however, by the death of Louis the Fat. Eleanor was Queen of France.

Eleanor is supposed to have found her husband dull and Paris cold but not one to waste an opportunity, she took advantage of the intellectual community, from which the University was to grow, to study dialectic, to polish up her Latin, and to learn langue d'oïl or the dialect of the North. These were the days of Abelard and other quickening, questioning minds, and Paris was full of students, many of them a sad lot, seemingly just as beatnik in the 12th as in the 20th Century.

out of sight out of danger

A dead tree removed from your sight also removes its danger. Brittle, decayed wood is not only unsightly, but can split apart and crash without warning.

Don't take this chance. Davey experts can remove dangerous trees even while the ground is frozen, causing little or no lawn damage. Our stump grinder removes ugly stumps below ground level.

AND NOW IS THE TIME TO TAKE ADVANTAGE OF DAVEY'S OFF-SEASON—FOR SPECIAL ECONOMY.

Enjoy unusual off-season economies in Davey's pruning, too. Trim off damaged or low-hanging limbs. A properly trimmed tree, even when dormant, can be beautiful against a winter sky.

Brace and cable heavy branches economically now, too. Sudden ice storms can split off branches and ruin a shapely, treasured, old tree forever.

ROYAL ROADS IN OLD FRANCE

If the crusade was divertissement for Eleanor, it was also the beginning of the end of her marriage. In 1151 Eleanor and Louis took their last joint chevauchée, through the Limousin in vintage season, held Christmas court in Limoges. Eleanor went on to St. Jean d'Angély. Louis, who had not cared for his queen's flirtatious manners at the court of Antioch, divorced her at a convocation in the charming town of Beaugency—probably to everyone's satisfaction.

Immediately Eleanor set out for Poitiers, with brief stopovers at the castle of Blois, the abbey of St. Martin in Tours, and a visit at her mother's family castle in Châtellerault, meantime eluding importunate suitors for her hand (i.e., lands) who were not above kidnapping. But eight weeks later in Poitiers, that castle seat of dolce fa niente, she married Henry, the dashing, blond Plantagenet pretender to the English throne with his boutonniere of golden broom. Strange to say, Henry, twelve years her junior, had been previously considered a good match for one of her two little daughters.

To telescope much blood and thunder, in 1154 while they were living with Henry's mother in Rouen, ducal seat of Normandy, the English throne became vacant and Henry and Eleanor hurried across the Channel to take it, departing in a sleet storm from Barfleur, hastening to the very same Winchester the Mods are now singing about, and were crowned in Westminster at Christmastime. Subsequently Eleanor was to cross the Channel frequently, as if by shuttle flight.

Their marriage resulted in eight regal offspring, including the doughty King Richard the Lion-Hearted and tricky King John of Magna Carta fame. Impetuous, engaging Henry, up to his ears in ambition and intrigue, is known for unpardonably causing the death of Thomas à Becket. While he was off to his own melees in England, Eleanor lived for a while in Angers. His unpardonable sin in Eleanor's eyes was a brazen dalliance with an English lady called Rosamond Clifford, so she withdrew with her children to her own bailiwick of Poitiers, setting up an elegant, literate "in" society, patronizing poets, troubadours, chroniclers, and knights, presiding with her ladies over those delicate, artificial pastimes called "Courts of Love," in which the knights gallantly answered puzzling, contrived questions about romantic, platonic love. This was a time of silks, embroideries, orphrey, furs of sable, var, gris, beaver, ermine, glittering things from the East.

Sweetness and light notwithstanding, Eleanor, the woman scorned, conspired with her sons against their father, and Henry reciprocated this sedition by giving her six years of durance vile in Salisbury Tower. Eventually released, she continued her travels, always in the interests of her territories and her children. At the age of 70 she brought a wife, Berengaria, to Richard in Messina in Sicily; when she was 72 she journeyed to Germany to ransom Richard from imprisonment. But, most spectacularly, at 80 she crossed the Pyrenees to Spain to bring her granddaughter Blanche of Castile back as a bride for the young Dauphin of France. Full of experience, wisdom, and, one imagines, undying liveliness of spirit, she departed the world at the Abbaye de Fontevrault in 1204, her 83rd year. She is entombed in the abbey with most of her family and lies next to Richard, her son. Her effigy represents her bewimpled, crowned, reclining at elegant ease, serenely reading a book, which something tells us was no breviary—the alert seeker even into eternity. You can see this pictured in Zoë Odenbourg's The Crusades, a beautiful background to Eleanor's time. For fascinating accounts of this peripatetic 12th-century charmer, her travels and her world, which may suggest new travel worlds to you, read Amy R. Kelly's Eleanor of Aquitaine and the Four Kings, and Eleanor of Aquitaine by Curtis Howe Walker, both published in 1950.
